

Politically Correct Stupidity

The award this week for the craziest utterance goes to New York City Mayor Mike Bloomberg.

Quoted below is Bloomberg's exchange with CBS Evening News anchor Katie Couric regarding the recent bombing attempt in the heart of Times Square by way of an abandoned Pathfinder SUV loaded with propane, gasoline, fertilizer, and fireworks.

Couric: "Law enforcement officials don't know who left the Nissan Pathfinder behind, but, at this point, the mayor believes the suspect acted alone."

Bloomberg: "If I had to guess 25 cents, this would be exactly that, somebody —"

Couric: "A home-grown?"

Bloomberg: "Home-grown, maybe a mentally deranged person or somebody with a political agenda that doesn't like the health care bill or something. It could be anything."

Note the irrationality. It could be "anything." Forget probabilities, experience, and common sense. The potentially-ballistic Nissan could have been dropped in Times Square by devotees of the Dalai Lama, distraught about Wal-Mart's Chinese imports. Or it might well have been the vegetarians, upset over the throngs of people lined up on the sidewalk in order to get a seat at Ruth's Chris Steak House on West 51st Street.

Or "anything" might be what Couric and Bloomberg seemed to be wishing for as the guilty bomber, a home-grown Tea Partier who "doesn't like the health care bill," some free-market guy who started to furiously stuff his Pathfinder with fertilizer and firecrackers the moment that Obama, Reid, and Pelosi succeeded in ramming through their government takeover of healthcare.

Bloomberg's "anything" isn't good enough. It ignores what's known. Predictably, it wasn't a vegan who put a bomb in his underpants in order to blast a few hundred people out of a plane in the skies over Detroit on Christmas Day.

Equally unsurprising, it wasn't a Dalai-inspired Tibetan radical or anyone coming straight from a Tea Party who opened fire at Fort Hood, killing 12 soldiers and a security guard and wounding an additional 31.

At Fort Hood, witnesses reported that Nidal Malik Hasan opened fire while shouting "Allahu Akbar!" ("God is great!"), the same words that 9-11 attack leader Mohamed Atta, via written instructions, told his fellow hijackers to scream once the face-to-face confrontations began with crew members and passengers on the four doomed flights: "Shout 'Allahu Akbar' because this strikes fear in the hearts of the non-believers."

On Northwest Flight 253, 10 minutes from landing in Detroit on Christmas, it was non-Tea Partier Umar Farouk Abdulmutallab, according to his fellow passengers, who had smoke coming out from under the blanket on his lap. He has since allegedly told U.S. officials that al-Qaida operatives in Yeman supplied him with the plastic explosives that were sewn into his underwear, a packet of explosives reportedly powerful enough to blow a hole as large as a basketball through the side of the plane.

Written by Ralph R. Reiland on May 17, 2010

None of the aforementioned acts of terrorism were about healthcare. None involved Presbyterians as the killers. All the attacks were rooted in the violent anti-American ideology of radical Islamic fundamentalism.

A recent Rasmussen poll shows that 55 percent of Americans favor a repeal of the Obama/Pelosi/Reid healthcare legislation. Bloomberg insulted this majority when he closed his eyes to the obvious source of anti-American terrorism and simultaneously suggested that the perpetrator in this latest attack against New York City might have been somebody that “doesn’t like the health care bill.”

Central Park seems like the perfect spot for a great big Tea Party.

Ralph R. Reiland is an associate professor of economics at Robert Morris University in Pittsburgh.

Subscribe to the New American

Get exclusive digital access to the most informative, non-partisan truthful news source for patriotic Americans!

Discover a refreshing blend of time-honored values, principles and insightful perspectives within the pages of "The New American" magazine. Delve into a world where tradition is the foundation, and exploration knows no bounds.

From politics and finance to foreign affairs, environment, culture, and technology, we bring you an unparalleled array of topics that matter most.

What's Included?

- 24 Issues Per Year
- Optional Print Edition
- Digital Edition Access
- Exclusive Subscriber Content
- Audio provided for all articles
- Unlimited access to past issues
- Coming Soon! Ad FREE
- 60-Day money back guarantee!
- Cancel anytime.

Subscribe