

The Trump Trial and Our Injustice System

I've long criticized our current US justice system — on all levels — as becoming much more about political justice than blind justice. The bizarre trial and conviction of former President Donald Trump last week on 34 felonies only reinforces my concerns.

The New York District Attorney, Sorosbacked Alvin Bragg, has been notorious for downgrading felony charges against others to misdemeanor charges. According to a recent article in the Daily Mail, Bragg had downgraded 60 percent of felony cases to lesser charges, resulting in violent criminals being released on the streets and a crime wave across New York City.

Ron Paul

But when it came to Donald Trump, Bragg lurched in the other direction, upgrading what normally would have been misdemeanor charges against anyone else to 34 felony charges against the former president. How can this sudden "about-face" be explained other than politics?

Jonathan Turley, who is no fan of Donald Trump, has been covering the trial closely and has found more than a little disturbing the exuberant celebrations of Trump's conviction among the mainstream media and his political opponents. Recently, he wrote:

"The conviction of former President Donald Trump in Manhattan of 34 felonies produced citywide celebrations [which] extended to the media, where former U.S. Attorney Harry Litman told MSNBC's Nicolle Wallace that it was 'majestic day' and 'a day to celebrate.' When I left the courthouse after watching the verdict come in, I was floored by the celebrations outside by both the public and some of the media."

Regardless of one's view of Donald Trump, it is a disturbing development in our society when justice is treated more like a football game where you root for your "team" rather than a way of preserving our freedom and liberty in an equal way for all.

The real goal of the trial was political. None other than George Soros' son Alex let the cat out of the bag recently when he advised fellow Trump-haters how to take advantage of the trial result. He posted on Twitter after the verdict, "Democrats should refer to Trump as a convicted felon at every opportunity. Repetition is the key to a successful message and we want people to wrestle with the notion of hiring a convicted felon for the most important job in the country!"

It was not about justice in any way. It was all about being able to call the likely Republican presidential nominee a "felon" so as to undermine his support among voters. In other words, election interference.

The market has a way of prevailing, however. The repeated attempts at using "lawfare" to remove Trump from the political scene have all backfired and actually have served to make the former president even more popular among voters. Immediately after Trump's conviction on the 34 charges he began sending out fundraising appeals based on his "persecution" by the state of New York. As of this writing, he has, according to press reports, raised over $200 million for his campaign.

Written by Ron Paul on June 4, 2024

The politicization of justice is not limited to the Democratic Party. The wind sown by political opponents of Donald Trump may well become the whirlwind they reap when their own political opponents are in positions of power. When that is the case, we all lose.

Ron Paul is a former U.S. congressman from Texas. This article originally appeared at the Ron Paul Institute for Peace and Prosperity and is reprinted here with permission.

Subscribe to the New American

Get exclusive digital access to the most informative, non-partisan truthful news source for patriotic Americans!

Discover a refreshing blend of time-honored values, principles and insightful perspectives within the pages of "The New American" magazine. Delve into a world where tradition is the foundation, and exploration knows no bounds.

From politics and finance to foreign affairs, environment, culture, and technology, we bring you an unparalleled array of topics that matter most.

Subscribe

What's Included?

24 Issues Per Year
Optional Print Edition
Digital Edition Access
Exclusive Subscriber Content
Audio provided for all articles
Unlimited access to past issues
Coming Soon! Ad FREE
60-Day money back guarantee!
Cancel anytime.