YouTube Hiring Software Engineers With Ties to Communist China

AP Images

The presence at YouTube of a number of software engineers who have formerly worked for Chinese Communist Party-run institutions raises concerns about China's influence on a major American platform and, by extension, on American elections.

One software engineer who has worked at YouTube since May of 2019, Tai Jinjiang, formerly worked as a project manager for Guangzhou Shian Technology.

According to Jinjiang's LinkedIn page, his work for the China-based firm involved playing a "major role in successful PLA certification of ShiAn terminal by Ministry of Public Security, State Secrecy Bureau, and IT Evaluation Center."

PLA appears to refer to the People's Liberation Army, meaning the YouTube employee led software efforts on behalf of China's military and other government-led intelligence bodies. He even "garnered numerous staff awards for excellent performance."

Then there's Xiao Chen. Listed on LinkedIn as a software engineer at YouTube since November of 2020, he previously served as a research assistant at Sun Yat-Sen University.

Still another software engineer, Xifei Huang, has worked at YouTube since February 2014, despite having previously worked as a developer for Beijing-based Peking University. The university has seen its researchers sentenced by the FBI for theft of intellectual property and failing to disclose Chinese Communist Party (CCP) ties. It is controlled by the CCP.

Moreover, Peking University counts former and current party apparatchiks among its leadership. Its leader is a former head of the Beijing branch of China's spy agency.

Fan Yang, who has worked as a YouTube software engineer since April 2017, interned for China Telecom, labeled by the U.S. Department of Defense as collaborating with the Chinese military for over two decades.

Facebook and Twitter also have a record of hiring individuals with CCP ties. For its part, Facebook hired at least six Chinese nationals to help with improving its censorship algorithms on its Hate Speech Engineering team. Twitter earlier this year appointed Dr. Fei-Fei Li, a Stanford professor and former Google vice president linked with CCP projects, to the company's board as an "independent advisor."

UN Says "Green Pandemic Recovery" Essential to Stop Climate Change

The United Nations has officially jumped on COVID-19's back as it relates to climate change. A report released December 9 by the United Nations Environment Programme (UNEP) has concluded that a "green pandemic recovery" will be essential in holding a predicted rise in global temperature by the year 2100 to 2° C or less.

The report claims that a "green pandemic recovery" could cut worldwide greenhouse-gas emissions by 25 percent or more, which could get the planet on target to meet the goals set by the Paris Climate Agreement in 2015.

The annual Emissions Gap Report found that, despite a predicted seven-percent drop in greenhouse gas emissions in 2020 due to the pandemic, the Earth is still on pace for a 3° C temperature increase unless drastic action is taken, and quickly.

"However, if governments invest in climate action as part of pandemic recovery and solidify emerging net-zero commitments with strengthened pledges at the next climate meeting — taking place in Glasgow in November 2021 — they can bring emissions to levels broadly consistent with the 2°C goal," a UNEP press release states.

And if we're willing to give up even more of our freedoms, the news is even better.

The press release goes on: "By combining a green pandemic recovery with swift moves to include new net-zero commitments in updated Nationally Determined Contributions (NDCs) under the Paris Agreement, and following up with rapid, stronger action, governments could still attain the more ambitious 1.5°C goal."

Some of the measures that the report suggests to reduce our carbon footprint include "direct support for zero-emissions technologies and infrastructure, reducing fossil fuel subsidies, and promoting nature based solutions — including large-scale landscape restoration and reforestation.”

“Developed nations, in particular the wealthy, bear greatest responsibility. The combined emissions of the richest one percent of the global population account for more than the poorest 50 percent,” the report declares.

“Consumption habits must change — not just to reduce climate change, but to address nature loss and pollution,” the report concludes.

BLM Divided Between National and Local Over Cullors’ Power Grab

AP Images

Although BLM has generally bragged about being a grassroots movement (despite the fact that it has been financed by billionaire George Soros from the beginning) without a central hierarchy, its most prominent figures at the national level want to restructure it into a more traditional political organization, forming a political action committee and corporate partnerships, and adding a third organizing arm.

But these moves to turn BLM into a sleek political machine are rubbing local members the wrong way, resulting in mutiny. Ten local chapters are cutting ties with the Black Lives Matter Global Network, the name of the national leadership.

In particular, the rebellious chapters are incensed that Patrisse Cullors, the only one of BLM’s co-founders to still be officially involved with the organization, named herself executive director of the national leadership without input from the local chapters.

“We became chapters of Black Lives Matter as radical Black organizers embracing a collective vision for Black people engaging in the protracted struggle for our lives against police terrorism,” the 10 disaffected chapters wrote in an open letter in early December. “With a willingness to do hard work that would put us at risk, we expected that the central organizational entity ... would support us chapters in our efforts to build communally.”

Referring to themselves as the #BLM10, the chapters put forth a list of a half-dozen contention points and grievances — among them Cullors' alleged power grab.

They also accuse the national leadership of lacking transparency over money raised and how chapters can get a piece of it, with complaints that local chapters have received little funding since the organization began in 2013.

A private discussion with Cullors didn't satisfy their concerns. "We didn't have an opportunity to agree to discuss. Nothing," said Yahné Ndgo, a lead organizer with Black Lives Matter Philadelphia. "So then we ask questions, and we are told no answers."

China Editing Genes to Create Superhuman Soldiers

FrankvandenBergh/GettyImagesPlus

The legatees of mass-murderer Mao Tse-tung are fiddling with the human genome to create an army of super soldiers, Director of National Intelligence John Ratcliffe wrote in the Wall Street Journal on December 3.

Ratcliffe's alarming news reprises a frightening account about mad Chinese scientists published last year by the Jamestown Foundation, which in turn riffed off MIT's report of China's creating super dogs for the police and military.

Ratcliffe described just how dangerous the Chinese have become because Chinese "students" study here and Chinese "entrepreneurs" have established a major beachhead in our economy.

But he also noted China's disregard for normative ethics and morals means it will do anything to achieve global domination. "U.S. intelligence shows that China has even conducted human testing on members of the People's Liberation Army in hope of developing soldiers with biologically enhanced capabilities," he wrote. "There are no ethical boundaries to Beijing's pursuit of power."

Citing China's media, the Jamestown Foundation reported last year that "Chinese military scientists and strategists have consistently emphasized that biotechnology could become a 'new strategic commanding heights of the future Revolution in Military Affairs.'"

That report cites the MIT Technology Review, which divulged in 2015 that China had created a heavily muscled beagle named Hercules.

"The first humans to be subject to genetic engineering were also born in China as a result of the research of He Jianqui,” Elsa Kania and Wilson VornDick reported for Jamestown. “He removed the gene CCR5 to give twin babies immunity to HIV.”

Yet even if an army of remorseless Chinese Terminators isn’t ready to attack just yet, “Beijing intends to dominate the U.S. and the rest of the planet economically, militarily and technologically,” Ratcliffe wrote.

China’s approach to “trade” and “investment” is really “economic espionage” — “rob, replicate and replace.”

Ratcliffe also explained that China has targeted “several dozen members of Congress and congressional aides” in a major “influence campaign.”

Pope Joins Rothschilds and Megabanks for “Inclusive Capitalism”

Pope Francis and the Vatican are doubling down on the Deep State push for globalism and technocracy, forming a highly controversial coalition for “Inclusive Capitalism” that brings together crony megabanks, Big Business, the United Nations, the Rothschild banking dynasty, the Rockefeller Foundation, and other key institutions of the global elite. Critics blasted and mocked the scheme.

The goal, according to the alliance, is to “evolve” capitalism to become more “inclusive” and “sustainable.” This includes helping to achieve the widely criticized United Nations Agenda 2030 “Sustainable Development Goals” (SDGs) that would usher in a technocratic system of global governance. In short, the New World Order agenda is getting a major boost from leaders of one of the world’s major religions.

Under a true free-market system, businesses seek to earn profit for their owners by best satisfying the needs and wants of customers. This ensures fair prices and high quality. With “inclusive capitalism,” however, global elites and their technocratic administrators — very much including those in this new coalition — establish various other goals and objectives including “environmental,” “social,” and so on. In short, “inclusive capitalism” is not actually capitalism.

According to a press release about the new scheme, the Vatican partnership puts members of the group

— some of the largest and most powerful economic actors on the planet — “under the moral guidance” of longtime critic of capitalism Pope Francis and the Vatican he leads. Cardinal Turkson, who runs the Dicastery for Promoting Integral Human Development, would serve as the pope’s emissary in guiding the new alliance.

Each year, the leaders of the organizations and firms involved will meet with the pope to advance the council’s mission. “What is needed is a fundamental renewal of hearts and minds so that the human person may always be placed at the center of social, cultural and economic life,” said Francis, without elaborating on what exactly that would entail.

Known as the “Council for Inclusive Capitalism with the Vatican,” the alliance will include leaders from organizations claiming to represent more than $10.5 trillion under management, $2.1 trillion in market capitalization, 200 million workers, and offices spread across 163 countries. Some of the most powerful firms, banks, and foundations on Earth are represented.

In all, there are 27 “Guardians of Inclusive Capitalism” so far. The list includes more than a few that have long promoted homosexuality, transgenderism, abortion, race-mongering, and other sins completely at odds with Catholic teachings and biblical morality. Among them: leaders of the UN, Visa, Bank of America, Johnson & Johnson, BP, MasterCard, Salesforce, the State of California, the Ford Foundation, the Rockefeller Foundation, and more.

Also at the helm of the scheme alongside Francis is Lynn Forester de Rothschild, a member of the ultra-wealthy banking dynasty who serves as the managing partner of “Inclusive Capital Partners.” To get a sense of the family’s influence, consider that the Rothschild banking dynasty funded totalitarian George Soros early on through the Banque Privée in Geneva, Switzerland.

“This Council will follow the warning from Pope Francis to listen to ‘the cry of the earth and the cry of the poor’ and answer society’s demands for a more equitable and sustainable model of growth,” Rothschild said about the new scheme, claiming “capitalism” has “left too many people behind, led to degradation of our planet, and is not widely trusted in society.”

Among the schemes of the new Rothschild-Francis-megabank-CEO-UN coalition will be the pursuit not just of “equality of opportunity,” but “equitable outcomes,” the council’s website explains. Of course, aside from equality under the law, which has long been established in the United States and other Western nations, free people can never be equal, and equal people can never be free.

The global push to finish off what remains of the free market should alarm every sensible person who values individual freedom, property rights, prosperity, opportunity, and the blessings of the free-enterprise system. With governments lawlessly bankrupting small businesses while showering trillions of tax dollars on large crony corporations under the guise of COVID-19, there is an unprecedented urgency if Americans are going to successfully resist. The time to get involved is now.
