Pfizer Vaccine Cripples Israel

What can I tell you? Your son goes to sleep and in the morning you find him dead. It's horrible.

— Meir Jacob, age 66

I can't describe it. Her life was hanging by a thread. A 34-year-old who was perfectly healthy. Now she is 100% disabled.

— Antonina, mother of a vaccine-injured patient

These comments from grief-stricken parents open an Israeli movie called The Testimonies Project, independently produced by a mother of two boys in response to her government's tyrannical COVID vaccine mandates that now include children as young as 12, and to media silence on the life-altering consequences many of her compatriots face from the jab. "When it comes to our children, the truth must come out," she says, describing her motive in documenting testimonies of the vaccine-injured in Israel.

Among the horror stories are heart disease, abnormal bleeding and miscarriages, blood clots and stroke, skin problems, infections and inflammation, neurological problems, and disease outbreak. There is the 27-year-old man, with no pre-vaccine health problems, who now lives with debilitating heart disease; the 34-year-old healthy mother of three who miscarried her fourth child in a violent spontaneous abortion; and 41-year-old Ali, now confined to a wheelchair, who laments, "I have no illness background, and suddenly two mid-life strokes? I'm honestly just waiting for the third one to end it."

Thousands of similar heartbreaking accounts make up the growing library of data collected by the Israeli People's Committee (IPC), the grassroots organization behind The Testimonies Project. The committee describes itself as an "a-political group of civilians" including doctors, attorneys, and scientists who accuse Israel's officials of using the "Corona Crisis" to forge a dictatorship and rob Israelis of their most basic human rights. They say the mainstream media is in lockstep with the government's "campaign of intimidation," with behavior "reminiscent of propaganda channels of dark totalitarian regimes."

Why is the small country of Israel worth noting? Its population is less than 10 million, and its territory encompasses fewer than 11,000 square miles. But early in what many call the “plandemic,” Israel’s government cut an exclusivity agreement with drug manufacturer Pfizer, paying above-market value for premium access to its vaccine. It was an irresistible offer because the country has one of the world’s most organized and technologically advanced healthcare systems, with tightly controlled monitoring of every citizen. Their data-for-doses deal prompted Pfizer CEO Albert Bourla to openly brag that Israel “has become the world’s lab.”

Fateful Pfizer

Americans have a vested interest in this partnership because in late August the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) granted the Pfizer Comirnaty vaccine full licensure for individuals age 16 and over, as opposed to emergency use authorization (EUA) that still applies to other COVID vaccines. (EUA also still applies to the Pfizer jab for youngsters between the ages of 12 and 15.) People have the right to refuse EUA drugs, but U.S. law purports to allow businesses and schools to mandate licensed vaccines. Predictably, within days of FDA’s approval, President Biden dictated public- and private-sector mandates, affecting an estimated 100 million workers nationwide.

Pfizer also filed an application with the FDA in October seeking EUA for a double jab of its current vaccine to be approved for children age five to 11. The only difference would be the dose: one-third of what adults get. (This, despite FDA commissioner Janet Woodcock’s unsettling admission, “We know from our vast experience with other pediatric vaccines that children are not small adults,” in a statement about Pfizer’s application.) Outrageously, the FDA promised to decide within weeks, rather than the months these types of applications normally take. Anyone want to make a bet on what that decision will be?

The situation obviously warrants close scrutiny of Israel, since an estimated 86 percent of its population has received at least two doses as of early October, according to Reuters’ COVID-19 Tracker. Almost all of these have been Pfizer jabs. How have Israelis achieved such high numbers? Credit goes to Israel’s

Green Pass system, implemented in February. With eerie overtones of the yellow badges that Nazis forced German Jews to wear during World War II, the Green Pass is a modern method of excluding people the government wants labeled as unclean. Flashing a Green Pass means you are clean and have government's permission to lead a normal life. Without it, you cannot attend public events, eat at restaurants, work out at the gym, travel internationally, attend synagogue or church — even your employment may be in jeopardy. In October, Israel tightened the screws further, awarding passports only to those who have also received a booster shot. Anticipating the need for future follow-up boosters, Green Passes expire in six months.

Likewise, Nazis originally used the yellow badge to segregate and ostracize Jews, a precursor to the “final solution” of complete extermination. But in the case of COVID vaccines, Nazi analogies don't end with the Green Pass. Forcing someone to get the experimental jab so he can lead a normal life recalls the barbaric medical experimentation Nazis carried out on prisoners during World War II. Though in this case, the experiment is being carried out not just on prisoners but on a country's entire population.

The Nuremburg Code, born during the post-war trials of Germany's war criminals, protects people from such atrocities. It serves as the basis of current U.S. healthcare regulations and stipulates that voluntary, informed consent is “absolutely essential” when it comes to medical experiments involving humans. It also demands that those involved be protected “against even remote possibilities of injury, disability or death.” When it comes to COVID vaccines, those possibilities are hardly remote, according to the U.S. government's early warning program, the Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System. VAERS has recorded more ill effects, including deaths, attributed to COVID vaccines than to all other vaccines combined since its inception in 1990. Moreover, Pfizer leads the pack in harmful effects compared to other COVID vaccine manufacturers.

Incredibly, despite glaring red flags, the FDA fully licensed Pfizer's vaccine in August. That means it is no longer experimental, and therefore the Nuremburg Code doesn't apply, right? Not exactly; the case isn't so straightforward. Notice that the FDA only licensed Pfizer's Comirnaty vaccine, a new name for its EUA product labeled BioNTech. In her letter accompanying FDA's approval of Comirnaty, chief scientist Denise Hinton wrote that the licensed vaccine can be “used interchangeably” with the EUA product since they have only legal, not clinical, differences. She failed to mention that one of the major legal differences is product liability. If you're harmed by Comirnaty, which is licensed, you can sue Pfizer. Hurt by BioNTech? You have no recourse.

And guess which label — Comirnaty or BioNTech — is the most prolific in both the United States and Israel. BioNTech, of course. Pfizer's advertising agency came up with the name Comirnaty recently, so most of the available vials still bear the BioNTech name.

Here's another catch: Clinical trials of the Pfizer-BioNTech vaccine have an "estimated study completion date" of January 31, 2023, according to the U.S. National Library of Medicine. That means, regardless of label, for the next 14 months anyone who gets a Pfizer jab is part of the drug's Phase IV clinical trials. What is a clinical trial? The first three phases of drug testing involve relatively small groups of volunteers — from under 100 up to several thousand. Normally, the FDA closely monitors these willing participants for many months (Phase I/II) or years (Phase III) to determine safety and efficacy, prior to authorizing medicines for public consumption. While it is not uncommon for Phase IV studies to be conducted after public release, in the case of COVID vaccines, the timetable is dangerously unprecedented.

Normal drug testing is a lengthy process. According to the FDA's website, Phase I usually lasts "several months," Phase II runs from "several months to 2 years," and Phase III requires from "1 to 4 years." The first three phases of Pfizer's BioNTech clinical trials took a record-breaking eight months, beginning in April 2020, only one month after the World Health Organization declared the pandemic. (This alone raises the question of how the drug was developed so quickly, for a supposedly novel virus reputedly first detected in December 2019.) By November 2020, the vaccine entered Phase III clinical trials, and one month after that, the FDA granted emergency use authorization, ushering in Phase IV. In characteristically deceptive fashion, Anthony Fauci, director of the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases, ignored the agency's inexcusable recklessness when he called FDA the "gold standard of regulatory agencies" and told PBS Newshour, "They worked double-time fast. They just did not cut any corners."

Israel's Lab Results

So, it's easy to understand why Pfizer's CEO declared Israel "the world's lab." Now that the country should have achieved herd immunity, boasting an 86-percent double-dose vaccination rate and required boosters available since July, what are the lab results?

According to Israeli Health Minister Nitzan Horowitz, everything's just peachy. "Israel is clear proof that a third vaccine is effective in the fight against the Delta [variant],” he tweeted in September. “It raises the level of protection in all age groups who receive the vaccine and is safe and without significant side effects, similar to the second dose.”

Ironically, Horowitz made this claim amidst a surge of COVID cases in his country. Prior to his tweet, Israel Today reported, “Israelis are frustrated by the fact that their nation has one of the highest COVID-19 vaccination rates ... and yet is also leading the world in daily rate of new infections.” It cited official data published in the journal Science that revealed a majority of Israel’s hospitalized patients are fully vaccinated. However, the article concluded that there is “no real risk in taking the vaccine.”

Indeed, Israel’s media is awash with news downplaying side effects. The Times of Israel admitted that myocarditis (heart inflammation) is linked to the vaccine, but said it “is extremely rare and in most cases mild.” The Jerusalem Post quoted an expert in infectious diseases claiming “there is no true reason to think there are any significant long-term effects” of vaccination.

On the contrary, scientists have discovered a threefold increased risk of myocarditis associated with the Pfizer vaccine, according to a case-control study by Israel’s Clalit Research Institute and Harvard Medical School. They also found significant risks of lymphadenopathy (enlarged lymph nodes), appendicitis, and herpes zoster (shingles) infection linked to Pfi-zer’s product.

How could Israel’s officials and media get it so wrong? “The state has systematically shut down all monitoring and tracking systems ... designed to identify and alert of adverse events,” explains the IPC in its Report of Adverse Events Related to the Corona Vaccine. It is important to point out that IPC is an independent, grassroots organization with limited resources, facing a massive establishment coverup. Its data gathering and reporting are naturally impeded. Regardless, left to rely solely on information publicly available, IPC concludes, “Never has a vaccine injured so many.”

For example, IPC discovered an 18-percent increase in overall mortality in Israel in the first quarter of 2021, early in Israel’s “Give a Shoulder” vaccination program which began on December 19, 2020. January through March marked their deadliest three months in a decade. Among Israelis aged 20 to 29, there was a 30-percent increase in overall mortality compared to the tri-monthly average in 2020, when the pandemic was supposedly ravaging the country. Particularly striking is the high correlation between the number of people vaccinated per day and the number of deaths per day, in the range of 10 days post-vaccination.

“We received 330 reports of deaths occurring in proximity after vaccination” in the same three-month period, IPC relates, estimating that its data reflect only one percent of the actual number of cases. Yet government and media have turned a blind eye. The Ministry of Health records only 45 post-vaccination deaths in the first quarter of 2021.

IPC’s research reveals an “incomprehensible gap between official Israeli media reports and what is really happening.” Media have quashed the fact that some 250,000 people refused their second jab, despite Green Pass pressures — likely because of adverse effects from the first dose. Among the injured, IPC finds an alarming rate of life-threatening issues including myocarditis, stroke, and pulmonary embolism. Miscarriages are common.

Disturbingly, doctors avoid blaming the vaccine. IPC credits frustrated hospital staffers with reporting this “diagnostic bias” and blames the official policy of “continuing vaccinations at all costs.” Prior to COVID vaccines, normal medical practice would attribute all adverse effects to the treatment itself until proven otherwise, out of concern for patient safety. Now vaccine victims receive nothing beyond tests to find other explanations for their conditions. When none are discovered, the injured are sent home with no assistance or follow-up.

Yet hospitals are full of the vaccine-injured. “A mother of a friend was treated in ER due to massive pneumonia,” relates an IPC informant. “The family asked the doctor whether it could be related to the vaccine. He mumbled an unclear answer. So they asked a nurse, and she replied: ‘Sure, we have a whole ward filled with post-vaccine pneumonia.’”

“It’s a disaster — an international disaster. We’re lab rats. That’s the truth,” states Malka, a vaccine-injured woman who tells her story in The Testimonies Project. She now lives with a persistent, painful, bloody skin rash that no doctor can explain. Prescribed lotions and ointments only exacerbate the condition.

The Israeli government continues to ignore thousands of victims such as Malka, while allowing children as young as five to get the Pfizer jab. That decision prompted the IPC to issue strong warnings that vaccinating children is mortally dangerous and unjustified. Regardless, there are at least three Israeli children who won’t show up to get shots. Their mother, Chaya, age 46, lives with right-side paralysis following a post-vaccine stroke. “I’m saying this now: if anyone dares to come near my kids ... I already donated my body to science. Now I want them to leave us alone.”
