

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

The Deep State & the Kennedy Assassination

“From Dallas, Texas,” a solemn Walter Cronkite announced on CBS News, “the flash apparently official, President Kennedy died at 1 p.m. Central Standard Time — 2 o’clock Eastern Standard Time — some 38 minutes ago.”

This announcement rocked America and the entire globe on November 22, 1963.

Although most people could not put their finger on it, there was a general sense that something profound — more profound than the murder of a popular president — had occurred. In the days, weeks, and months that subsequently passed, this sentiment progressively materialized. America witnessed its first televised murder when Jack Ruby shot and killed the only suspect ever named in the Kennedy assassination — Lee Harvey Oswald.

wikipedia/pubic domain

A commission was hastily put together to investigate and posthumously convict Oswald. U.S. involvement in Vietnam rapidly increased. The profits and power of the military-industrial complex soared, and Kennedy’s brother Robert was assassinated in California while running for the U.S. presidency on an anti-war platform. Throughout this tumultuous and chaotic period, there was one group of powerful actors who never seemed concerned and who always seemed to benefit. They have gone by a variety of names in the past, but today we know them as the Deep State.

It is this group of politicians, bureaucrats, operatives, influencers, and power brokers who had the motive, means, and opportunity not only to assassinate a sitting president, but to cover it up for the next 60 years. Once we understand who these people are, the power they wield, their motivations, and their ultimate goals, we begin to develop a lens that brings the situation into clear focus. With this lens, we are prompted to ask new questions, such as “why” JFK was killed, rather than “who” was physically behind the gun.

When we consider this in light of an insider conspiracy, rather than the action of an isolated, down-on-his-luck malcontent with a cheap Italian carbine, we refine our understanding of the forces responsible for Kennedy’s death, and develop a new motivation to seize the levers of power from the authoritarian hands of the Deep State. By doing so, we can make something good come from this tragedy and regain some semblance of our self-governing, liberty-loving, constitutionally limited representative republic.

What Is the Deep State?

In recent years, the term “Deep State” has become popular in the United States to describe the shadowy forces behind the scenes seeking to manipulate American government, primarily, but also other sectors of society. Typically, those who use the term are referring to unelected bureaucrats, intelligence agencies, and others within the “permanent government.”

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

The Deep State as it has become known today cannot be understood properly by merely considering it to be a stand-alone entity. As the late Georgetown University Professor Carroll Quigley explained in his book Tragedy and Hope, it operates alongside of and collaborates with international communism. This is a critical facet of mid-century American politics that bears directly and heavily upon the murder in Dallas in 1963. Indeed, no less than former Congressman Martin Dies of Texas, who served for seven years as chairman of the House Committee on Un-American Activities, attributed the assassination of the president to the communist infiltration of the United States that had long been ignored, covered up, and even encouraged by its allies and fellow travelers within the Deep State. Many presidential administrations, up to and including Kennedy’s own, failed to confront the threat of internal communist subversion, Dies wrote in 1964 for American Opinion magazine — a predecessor of The New American. “There were strong political reasons why these Administrations failed to proceed vigorously against Communists in this country,” Dies wrote. “But the point is that constant ‘Liberal’ failure to even so much as acknowledge the existence of an internal Communist threat resulted in the assassination of President Kennedy.”

The question is why the communist-Deep State axis would want to kill the president. After all, Kennedy seemingly was acting in alignment with their goals, generally speaking. He was himself a liberal with internationalist tendencies. And yet, a closer examination reveals that, despite appearances, to both the communists and the Deep State alike, Kennedy was a wild card and his assassination would end the threat he posed to their operations while simultaneously serving as a means to both sow fear and discord among the American people and discredit conservative and anti-communist opposition to the subversion of the country. Ultimately, as you will see, President Kennedy simply stood in their way.

Earlier that day: Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy arriving in Dallas the morning of the assassination, with Jacqueline Kennedy wearing her recognizable pink suit, which would later be stained by her husband’s blood.(AP Images)

Fear and Loathing of President Kennedy

If Kennedy was indeed a threat to the leftist Deep State-communist program, then some evidence of the fact that he was perceived as such should have been clear. In fact, at least one significant observer of political affairs at that time noticed just such a fear of and disdain for Kennedy among leftists at the time.

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

The observer who noticed this was none other than celebrated bestselling novelist Taylor Caldwell. Perhaps not well-known today, by the time of Kennedy's election Caldwell — a pen name — had already written 22 novels, among them many bestsellers. Her first, Dynasty of Death, appeared in 1938 and was, according to the Los Angeles Times, "a blockbuster in the stores." She was also a conservative and, as the Kennedy presidency moved toward tragedy, became more and more worried about what might happen to the president. Just three weeks before Dallas she wrote of her fears in the Catholic newspaper The Wanderer.

"The enemies of freedom and God are everywhere in every country of the West," Caldwell wrote. "It is possible that Mr. Kennedy is in personal jeopardy from them, a matter which is not being mentioned in the newspapers. Indeed, it is very probable. Presidents have been murdered before in our history and in less dreadful times."

She went on to explain the reasons for her fear. "I receive quite a number of pro-Communist and 'Liberal' periodicals, and some are quite inflammatory against Mr. Kennedy. The tone of the 'liberal' periodicals — some of our big monthly magazines, for instance — [is] wrathful against our President. It seems that they had expected him to overthrow the Constitution and set up a sort of crypto-Communist dictatorship. (They call it 'progress.')

 He has disappointed them."

Kennedy didn't take long to put the communist-Deep State conspiracy on notice. Just a few months after taking office, he delivered one of the most important speeches ever given by an American president.

On April 27, 1961 at the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel in New York City, Kennedy delivered a speech titled "The President and The Press: Address Before the American Newspaper Publishers Association." In that speech, JFK in no uncertain terms condemned both secret societies and the communist conspiracy of which they were a part:

The very word "secrecy" is repugnant in a free and open society; and we are as a people inherently and historically opposed to secret societies, to secret oaths and to secret proceedings. We decided long ago that the dangers of excessive and unwarranted concealment of pertinent facts far outweighed the dangers which are cited to justify it. Even today, there is little value in opposing the threat of a closed society by imitating its arbitrary restrictions. Even today, there is little value in ensuring the survival of our nation if our traditions do not survive with it.... For we are opposed around the world by a monolithic and ruthless conspiracy that relies primarily on covert means for expanding its sphere of influence — on infiltration instead of invasion, on subversion instead of elections, on intimidation instead of free choice, on guerrillas by night instead of armies by day. It is a system which has conscripted vast human and material resources into the building of a tightly knit, highly efficient machine that combines military, diplomatic, intelligence, economic, scientific and political operations. Its preparations are concealed, not published. Its mistakes are buried, not headlined. Its dissenters are silenced, not praised. No expenditure is questioned, no rumor is printed, no secret is revealed. It conducts the Cold War, in short, with a war-time discipline no democracy would ever hope or wish to match.

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

Kennedy's hardline statements condemning secret societies, bureaucracy, and corruption certainly would not have sat well with the Deep State actors whose ways and means were perfectly described by the president. His words resonate more today than ever before.

Many American presidents and politicians have a background of attending or holding membership in such secret societies. William Taft, George H.W. Bush, George W. Bush, and John Kerry were members of the infamous Skull and Bones society based out of Yale University.

Theodore Roosevelt, Richard Nixon, Gerald Ford, Henry Kissinger, Nelson Rockefeller, and even, most recently, Kevin McCarthy, along with 2,500 powerful CEOs, heads of intelligence agencies, media titans, and elites have attended the Bohemian Grove, a private men's club in Monte Rio, California, that meets in the woods and conducts rituals in front of a 40-foot-tall statue of an owl.

Even Earl Warren, the 14th U.S. Supreme Court chief justice and head of Lyndon B. Johnson's Warren Commission that investigated JFK's assassination, attended the nefarious Bohemian Grove.

Certainly, Kennedy's rhetoric condemning such societies would have rubbed the establishment the wrong way.

This speech most certainly would have hit home hardest with the "secret society" operating most closely to him within the federal apparatus: the intelligence community centered on the Central Intelligence Agency. In fact, Kennedy was already at war with the CIA when he delivered his remarks at the Waldorf-Astoria in what some have described as the speech that led to his assassination.

Dissolution of the CIA

The CIA would not have missed the words in Kennedy's speech that applied as equally to them as they did to the international communist conspiracy writ large. His references to "covert means" of operation, to "infiltration instead of invasion," and to "subversion instead of elections" would have been taken to be direct references to recent CIA operations — which, in fact, they were. But the crosshairs of the president fell most directly on the CIA when he referenced the use of "guerrillas by night instead of armies by day." No one in the Deep State's intelligence apparatus would have missed this direct rhetorical reference to and attack on the Bay of Pigs fiasco that had occurred just the week before Kennedy delivered his remarks.

The CIA was on a collision course with Kennedy long before "Camelot" was ever imagined. From its very founding, the organization was corrupted by the inclusion of both communist and National Socialist operatives. The latter were represented by elements sourced via the intelligence community's very own version of "Operation Paperclip." That operation saw America import Nazi scientists into U.S. operations ostensibly to keep them out of the hands of the Kremlin after the fall of Nazi Germany. For the secretive intelligence community, this meant the adoption of assets sourced from Foreign Armies East, the German eastern European military intelligence operation run by spymaster and General Reinhard Gehlen and known as the "Gehlen Org." It was directed by the CIA, formed the core of NATO's intelligence operation, and became the foundation of the West German intelligence agency. It was also, by most accounts, deeply infiltrated by communists directed by Moscow.

So, it seems, was the CIA, which itself traced its origins to World War II and the Office of Strategic Services. The OSS, created and run by William "Wild Bill" Donovan, was filled with communists. In a letter to the editor of The Washington Post regarding charges of infiltration of the OSS, Charles Pinck,

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

the OSS society president, said, “The OSS was not infiltrated by communists during the war; it hired them.”

The degree to which the organization was infiltrated was noted by Robert Novak in a review of the book The Venona Secrets: Exposing Soviet Espionage and America’s Traitors. Writing in The Weekly Standard in 2000, Novak noted, “Perhaps the most startling revelation is the thorough Soviet penetration of Wild Bill Donovan’s Office of Strategic Services, forerunner to the CIA. Maurice Halperin, chief of the Latin American division, was an NKVD agent. So was Duncan Lee, Donovan’s assistant.” Halperin went on to become an advisor to Secretary of State Dean Acheson, and later became an advisor to the UN at the San Francisco conference where communist spy Alger Hiss served as secretary-general.

The OSS was dissolved one month after World War II ended. The CIA assumed its responsibilities, and many OSS holdovers were still loyal to the communists. Moreover, the CIA was infiltrated by Deep State globalists, working with the communists, and Kennedy was catching on. These included high-profile agent Cord Meyer, who had long had idealistic goals for the creation of a world government, which he shared with his wife, Mary Pinchot Meyer. Later, after her divorce from Cord, Mary — who publicly was friends with Jackie Kennedy — would have an affair with President Kennedy. Her intimacies and perhaps other significant details of Kennedy’s secret life were recorded in her diary, which, as documented by Peter Janney — the son of another CIA agent — disappeared into the hands of the CIA immediately after she was herself assassinated on October 12, 1964.

Clearly there was a great deal of public and private intrigue and animosity between the communist conspiracy, the Deep State and its intelligence assets, and the president, and it was quickly coming to a head. According to relatives within the Kennedy family, including Robert F. Kennedy and his son, Robert F. Kennedy, Jr., JFK had unequivocally said that his desire was to “splinter the CIA into a thousand pieces and scatter it to the winds.” This splintering began with the firing of Allen Dulles.

Dulles was the director of the CIA, the first civilian and longest-serving director to ever hold the position. He was an untouchable in U.S. politics, alongside his brother, John Foster Dulles, who served as secretary of state under President Dwight Eisenhower.

Allen Dulles — who early on recruited Cord Meyer to the CIA — was also a prominent member of the Council on Foreign Relations (CFR). The CFR, which is the American brain and public face of what many would call the “swamp” or “Deep State,” was founded in 1921, and is likely the most powerful “think tank” in the world. Notable members include the late David Rockefeller, who served as the organization’s chairman; Henry Kissinger; George Soros; and Bill Clinton, to name a few. Dulles’ involvement in the CFR and CIA illustrates the foothold the council has within U.S. politics.

President Kennedy’s growing distrust of and disdain for the CIA began after the failure of the Bay of Pigs invasion. It was then he saw how the CIA frequently deviated from its original assignment of serving as a fact-finding arm of the presidency, instead acting as a policymaking collaborator or agitator with foreign nations.

The Bay of Pigs operation was largely overseen by Dulles and was planned by the CIA during the spring of 1960, before Kennedy was in office. The invasion officially began on April 17, 1961, just three months into Kennedy’s presidency. It had been vigorously opposed by the new president.

Kennedy removed Dulles from his post after the mission went sideways, and it “revealed to the

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

President that he could not give his complete trust to the experts,” as historian Joshua H. Sandman wrote. Kennedy no longer viewed the CIA as a trusted ally to provide him with information, but saw it as an unaccountable department operating outside the bounds of America’s elected government. His affair with Mary Pinchot Meyer — who was intimately familiar with high-ranking CIA personnel, including James Jesus Angleton, who is thought to have destroyed her diary — almost certainly gave him access to inside “dirt” on the agency’s activities.

Harry S. Truman, the 33rd president of the United States, later in his life shared a similar distrust of and disappointment in the CIA. In 1947, Truman signed into law the National Security Act of 1947, merging the Department of War and the Department of the Navy into the National Military Establishment, which later turned into the Department of Defense. The act also brought about the formation of the U.S. Air Force and the Central Intelligence Agency.

Exactly one month after JFK’s assassination, Truman penned an article in The Washington Post on December 22, 1963, titled “Limit CIA Role To Intelligence.”

“I think it has become necessary to take another look at the purpose and operations of our Central Intelligence Agency — CIA,” the former president reflected. “For some time I have been disturbed by the way CIA has been diverted from its original assignment. It has become an operational and at times a policy-making arm of the Government. This has led to trouble and may have compounded our difficulties in several explosive areas.”

When concluding his assessment of the agency, Truman revealed, “I never had any thought that when I set up the CIA that it would be injected into peacetime cloak and dagger operations. Some of the complications and embarrassment I think we have experienced are in part attributable to the fact that this quiet intelligence arm of the President has been so removed from its intended role that it is being interpreted as a symbol of sinister and mysterious foreign intrigue.”

The CIA — along with almost every other three-letter governmental department — has grown far beyond its original jurisdiction and constitutional limits. Anyone in a position of power who speaks out about this truth is dangerous to the Deep State.

JFK was one of those truth tellers, and was perceived as being off his leash. Shortly after his murder, Mary Pinchot Meyer confided in psychologist Timothy Leary. “They couldn’t control him any more. He was changing too fast” she said in a tearful and frightful tone in a phone call to the LSD guru.

Undefeated: Cuban revolutionary Fidel Castro (center) shortly after the failed Bay of Pigs invasion. (AP Images)

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

Withdrawing Troops From Vietnam

The most obvious stance that Kennedy took against the establishment was his insistence on reducing U.S. involvement in Vietnam.

In Jim Marrs' book Crossfire: The Plot That Killed Kennedy, he documents the insider view of the president's opinion on the war in Vietnam: "According to assistant secretary of state Roger Hilsman, Kennedy said, "The Bay of Pigs has taught me a number of things. One is not to trust generals or the CIA, and the second is that if the American people do not want to use American troops to remove a Communist regime 90 miles away from our coast, how can I ask them to use troops to remove a Communist regime 9,000 miles away?"

Kennedy even took his stance on U.S. involvement in Vietnam to the airwaves in a public broadcast on September 2, 1963, saying, "In the final analysis, it is their war. They have to win or lose it."

Throughout 1963, the Kennedy administration sent U.S. Defense Secretary Robert McNamara and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff Maxwell Taylor to South Vietnam on fact-finding missions to get a firsthand view of the situation.

Secretary McNamara wrote in a May 6, 1963 memo analyzing preliminary plans for a withdrawal that "[the removal of 1,000 troops] would have to be handled carefully due to the psychological impact. However, there should be an intensive training program of RVNAF [Republic of Vietnam Air Force] to allow removal of U.S. units rather than individuals."

Seeing that the training and abilities of the Army of the Republic of Vietnam were increasing and the army was capable of fighting more effectively, Secretary McNamara and Chairman Taylor advised the president that an incremental removal of troops from Vietnam was the correct course of action.

On October 4, 1963, Maxwell Taylor wrote a memorandum to key Kennedy administration military generals and admirals, revealing that "On 2 Oct. the President approved recommendations relating to military matters contained in the trip report of the Secretary of Defense and the Chairman, Joint Chiefs of Staff."

Taylor, a former World War II 101st Airborne Division soldier, then disclosed the recommendations: "All planning will be directed towards preparing RVN forces for the withdrawal of all U.S. special assistance units and personnel by the end of the calendar year 1965.”

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

Seven days later, on October 11, 1963, President Kennedy approved National Security Action Memorandum (NSAM) 263. The document announced a major public stance by the administration to pull back efforts in Vietnam, stating, “At a meeting on October 5, 1963, the President considered the recommendations contained in the report of Secretary McNamara and General Taylor on their mission to South Vietnam. The President approved the military recommendations contained in Section I B (1-3) of the report, but directed that no formal announcement be made of the implementation of plans to withdraw 1,000 U.S. military personnel by the end of 1963.”

Forty-two days after Kennedy signed NSAM 263 initiating a withdrawal, he was assassinated.

Kenneth O’Donnell, in the book Johnny, We Hardly Knew Ye, wrote, “The President’s orders to reduce American military personnel in Vietnam by one thousand before the end of 1963 was still in effect on the day he went to Texas. A few days after his death, during the mourning, the order was quietly rescinded.”

Despite Kennedy’s apparent previous support for U.S. intervention in Vietnam, he was trying to deescalate American involvement to decrease the potential for a third world war. This was a position that many Americans agreed with but deviated from the internal establishment plan to increase military involvement in Vietnam, Laos, and Cambodia.

The Deep State had planned to divide the nation through the war, weaken the U.S. economy by spending endless amounts of taxpayer money, and destroy American stature through entanglement in a war they were not allowed to win.

The Assassination

Kennedy was in Texas with his wife, Jacqueline Kennedy, for a two-day, five-city tour of the Lone Star State, a crucial battleground JFK needed to win for his reelection bid.

There was division within the Democratic Party in the state, and Kennedy’s positive appearance with Democratic Governor John Connally (who later became a Republican, in 1973), along with Senator Ralph W. Yarborough was needed to unify the party.

Mr. and Mrs. Kennedy were staying in the Texas Hotel in Fort Worth the night before his assassination. In the 1967 book The Death of a President, a book written at the behest of Jacqueline Kennedy, author William Manchester details a conversation that JFK and Jackie had in their hotel room that evening.

“Last night would have been a hell of a night to assassinate a president,” JFK said to his wife. “I mean it,” he emphasized, stating they were “all getting jostled” during this trip; a sobering reflection that shows how Kennedy distrusted his security.

The morning of November 22 brought light rain to Dallas. Kennedy spoke outside the Texas Hotel, unprotected from precipitation, and offered a few brief remarks.

“There are no faint hearts in Fort Worth,” he began, “and I appreciate you being here.” The president then went on to say that the United States should be “second to none” in military capability and in the race for dominance in outer space.

From the hotel, Kennedy then got in the presidential limousine. It had only just stopped raining, but the bubble top of the vehicle had been left off.

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

Around 12:30 p.m., the presidential limousine took a sharp turn from Houston Street onto Elm Street, slowing to a low speed.

As the motorcade began to go down Elm Street, several shots were fired at Kennedy and Governor Connally. Both were struck multiple times, and President Kennedy was pronounced dead at Parkland Hospital at 1:00 p.m.

Why?

Many authors have, with great detail and numerous theories, meticulously laid out the “when,” “who,” and “how” surrounding JFK’s murder, endlessly speculating every possible angle.

Lee Harvey Oswald? The Mafia? The KGB? Cuba? Fidel Castro? The CIA? Jack Ruby? Lone gunman or multiple shooters?

All these questions and culprits keep the American people guessing. However, the most important question that should be asked 60 years later is, “Why?”

The how and the who are just scenery to keep concerned Americans from asking the most important questions: Why was Kennedy killed? Who benefited? Who had the power to cover it up?

Boiling down the Kennedy assassination to the core of why it happened and what we can do in light of it is of utmost importance to Americans today.

Applying Hanlon’s razor, an adage saying you should “never attribute to malice that which is adequately explained by stupidity,” can we assume that JFK’s assassination was merely the result of incompetence on behalf of the Secret Service, the CIA, the FBI, and local law enforcement?

This theory is highly unlikely. Three presidents had been assassinated prior to JFK: Abraham Lincoln, James Garfield, and William McKinley. Additionally, multiple presidents had had attempts on their lives prior to JFK: Theodore Roosevelt, Franklin D. Roosevelt, and Andrew Jackson were all shot at, with Theodore Roosevelt being the only one to sustain an injury.

The Secret Service certainly had sophisticated methods for protecting the president, especially during a dangerous time such as the Cold War in the early 1960s.

Additionally, it is well documented that the CIA had tabs on Lee Harvey Oswald as early as several weeks prior to the assassination. He was a known security risk. In April 1963, Oswald attempted to assassinate former Army General Edwin Walker, who was a member of The John Birch Society, with the same Italian Carcano rifle he wielded when allegedly killing Kennedy. Oswald missed Walker’s head by an inch.

It is reasonable to believe that authorities had knowledge of Oswald’s employment at the Texas School Book Depository, overlooking the route through which the president would travel at a low speed while in an unprotected convertible.

Occam’s razor states, “Plurality should not be posited without necessity.” In other words, do not over-complicate an issue when a simple and evident conclusion is present.

Does it really make sense that Oswald alone could have planned the entire operation, including obtaining employment at the Book Depository, knowing the route and timing of the motorcade, knowing that the building would not be cleared by the Secret Service, and knowing that the top would be off of the limousine, giving him the possibility of success? Could he have been responsible for the Secret Service deviating from its protocols, for the inadequate investigation, for the subsequent mockingbird media coverage declaring him to be the lone gunman, and for the elimination of the only suspect (himself)? Furthermore, why didn't he, like every alleged presidential assassin before him, proudly proclaim what he had accomplished?

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

Using these two rubrics, and considering the documented evidence of policies, positions, statements, and actions that would make Kennedy a prime target for the establishment to eradicate, it is reasonable to conclude that the assassination of JFK was a conspiracy organized by the Deep State to advance its agenda to dissolve American sovereignty.

Who Benefited?

By the time the failing Vietnam War had ended, the United States had spent more than $141 billion in South Vietnam.

When the Paris Peace Accords were signed in January of 1973, an astonishing 58,000 American soldiers had died in the war.

The United States lost 5,607 helicopters, 3,744 planes, and 578 unmanned aerial vehicles (UAVs) while in Vietnam.

Sun Tzu, the sixth-century B.C. Chinese general and war strategist, observed in his work The Art of War, "There is no instance of a nation benefiting from prolonged warfare." The Deep State seems to ignore this advice to pursue wars with no end in sight. If prolonged warfare does not benefit the nation, who does it benefit?

As Robert F. Kennedy, Jr. has accurately assessed, the United States was compromised by "the corrupt merger of state and corporate power" after JFK's death. The corporate power that is the beneficiary in this merger is the military-industrial complex, which can be defined as a country's military and the defense industry that supplies it.

President Dwight Eisenhower, who himself was involved in Operation Keelhaul — the forced repatriation of civilians and soldiers under Western control to Soviet communists after WWII — focused almost solely on the threat of a military-industrial complex in his farewell address in 1961. He reflected, "In the councils of government, we must guard against the acquisition of unwarranted influence, whether sought or unsought, by the military industrial complex. The potential for the disastrous rise of misplaced power exists and will persist."

One of the greatest sources of authority against the people within any civil government lies in its war powers. The loss of liberty, sovereignty, and national integrity is a real possibility when America engages in endless wars — particularly those wars that are destined to fail, yet financially benefit the few at the expense of the many.

Kennedy tried to stop that.

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

Bring them home: Robert McNamara conversing with Major General John Norton at Phù Cát Air Base in Vietnam. (AP Images)

Who Had the Power to Cover It Up?

After Kennedy's assassination, Lyndon B. Johnson signed Executive Order 11130, "Appointing a Commission to Report Upon the Assassination of President John F. Kennedy," commonly referred to as the Warren Commission.

In addition to Chief Justice Earl Warren, members of the commission were Senator Richard B. Russell (D-Ga.), Senator John Sherman Cooper (R-Ky.), Representative Hale Boggs (D-La.), Representative Gerald R. Ford (R-Mich.), CFR Chairman John J. McCloy, and former CIA Director Allen Dulles (who had been fired by the late president).

Three out of seven on the Warren Commission were active CFR members. John J. McCloy preceded David Rockefeller as the chairman of the CFR; Gerald Ford was a member; and Allen Dulles served as CFR president for four years.

The commission found that Lee Harvey Oswald acted as a lone gunman firing three bullets. The commission's findings have been highly controversial and contested.

In 1976, the House of Representatives established a Select Committee on Assassinations (HSCA) to investigate the murders of JFK and Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. The committee concluded that JFK's death was the result of a conspiracy. Congressman Louis Stokes (D-Ohio), the chairman of the HSCA, observed, "One of the first things we found out was that the Warren Commission never pursued a conspiracy investigation."

"I am just a patsy," Lee Harvey Oswald shouted as he was being whisked away by the Dallas police into interrogation meetings that were never recorded. It is likely that he was low on the totem pole of conspirators.

Pinning the blame on Oswald alone became an easy narrative to push when he was executed in public two days after Kennedy's death, on November 24, 1963, by nefarious Chicago Outfit gangster Jack Ruby.

One of the more absurd conclusions and main theses of the commission is what critics have labeled the

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

“magic bullet theory.” The consensus of the report provided by Warren and company was that three bullets were fired by Oswald out of a bolt-action Italian Carcano rifle in 8.6 seconds. The first shot missed, the second struck Kennedy and Governor Connally, and the third struck the president in the head, killing him.

The second shot is what has been dubbed the “magic bullet.” This theory pushed by the Warren Report to justify Oswald as the lone gunman posits that the second bullet struck Kennedy 5 3/4” below his collar, exited his throat, entered Governor Connally’s ribs near his right armpit, exited his chest under his right nipple, proceeded to enter his right wrist, shattering his radius, and finally landed in his left thigh.

The “magic” bullet was recovered on Governor Connally’s stretcher at Parkland Hospital. It was in nearly perfect condition, even though it allegedly penetrated a back brace, 15 layers of clothing, seven layers of skin, and approximately 15 inches of muscle tissue while devastating four inches of Connally’s rib and destroying his radius.

The Warren Commission has all the markings of a government coverup. It avoided key facts, ignored witnesses, and offered conclusions that were intended to provide closure rather than the truth.

Release the Documents!

In 1992, Congress passed the President John F. Kennedy Assassination Records Collection Act, which stated that all documents relating to the JFK murder must be released by October 26, 2017 unless the president sees the disclosure as an intelligence operation and national security risk.

No president has fully released all the documents in accordance with the act.

President Trump, when presented with the choice to release the documents in October 2017, released 2,800 documents, with redactions, relating to the JFK assassination, but, under the direction of then-CIA Director Mike Pompeo, decided to withhold the remaining documentation.

Roger Stone, a political advisor who worked in the Nixon, Reagan, and Trump White Houses, asked President Trump why he didn’t release the full documentation on JFK’s murder. Trump’s answer, according to Stone: “I can’t tell you. It’s so horrible you wouldn’t believe it. Someday you’ll find out.”

Trump has now vowed to release all the documents if reelected in 2024.

The American people, 60 years later, deserve the full, unbridled truth regarding the death of their president, John F. Kennedy.

If the Deep State can eliminate the president of the United States, they can do almost anything. Despite six decades of investigations, reports, laws, books, and movies released about this national tragedy, the American people still do not know the full truth. No matter their position on the Kennedy assassination, every American should call for the release of each and every document relating to Kennedy’s killing and the conspirators behind it.

President Kennedy famously admonished Americans in his 1961 inaugural address, “Ask not what your country can do for you — ask what you can do for your country.”

What we can do, and must do, for our country is demand the truth from our representatives in this constitutional republic. Justice is not easy, and it does not come automatically. It takes vigilance,

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

conviction, and action from patriotic, moral citizens devoted to the dream of America.

Your country needs you to save it.

Written by Andrew Muller on November 7, 2023

Published in the November 27, 2023 issue of the New American magazine. Vol. 39, No. 22

Subscribe to the New American

Get exclusive digital access to the most informative, non-partisan truthful news source for patriotic Americans!

Discover a refreshing blend of time-honored values, principles and insightful perspectives within the pages of "The New American" magazine. Delve into a world where tradition is the foundation, and exploration knows no bounds.

From politics and finance to foreign affairs, environment, culture, and technology, we bring you an unparalleled array of topics that matter most.

Subscribe

What's Included?

- 24 Issues Per Year
- Optional Print Edition
- Digital Edition Access
- Exclusive Subscriber Content
- Audio provided for all articles
- Unlimited access to past issues
- Coming Soon! Ad FREE
- 60-Day money back guarantee!
- Cancel anytime.