End Game: COVID and the Dark State Quest for Bio-digital Convergence in a Transhumanist World

End Game: COVID and the Dark State Quest for Bio-digital Convergence in a Transhumanist World, by Dennis Behreandt, Western Islands: Appleton, Wisconsin, 2022, 346 pages.

The “plandemic” concept is no longer a far-fetched conspiracy theory, thanks to mounting evidence of collusion between the United States and China’s Wuhan Institute of Virology. It began with congressional testimony by National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID) head Dr. Anthony Fauci last May, when he admitted “modest collaboration” with Wuhan, forcing Facebook to reverse its policy banning posts that suggest SARS-CoV-2, the virus that causes Covid-19, is man-made.

Since then, House Republicans have demanded explanations from Fauci for thousands of damning e-mails obtained via Freedom of Information Act (FOIA) requests and lawsuits, evincing not only that the president’s chief medical advisor was aware of China’s coronavirus gain-of-function research (i.e., genetic altering of viruses so they become more infectious), but that he lied under oath about it and a possible lab leak. Most recently came the bombshell release of military documents obtained by Project Veritas, confirming that Fauci knew taxpayers had funded those studies in Wuhan as well as at several sites across the United States.

Other e-mails released in December by the House Select Subcommittee on the Coronavirus Crisis reveal Fauci discussing plans with his boss, now-retired National Institutes of Health (NIH) director Francis Collins, in October 2020 to foist a “quick and devastating published take down” of the Great Barrington Declaration, a statement warning against “irreparable damage” of the official Covid-19 response. More than 900,000 signatories have endorsed the document, including Nobel Prize winning biophysicist Michael Levitt and experts from respected institutions such as Harvard, Stanford, and Oxford. Collins labeled them “fringe.”

Yet the damage they forecast is culminating in worldwide destruction of essential rights and a global economic shutdown. Even more tragic are unnecessary Covid deaths due to government rejection of safe and effective treatments involving time-tested medicines such as hydroxychloroquine and ivermectin. “People are dying because they are denied highly effective, cheap, widely available drugs that do not present as obscene profits to the pharmaceutical companies,” Dr. Pierre Kory, physician and co-founder of the Front Line COVID-19 Critical Care Alliance, told Fox News’ Maria Bartiromo in a panel interview.

Turning to her other guest, U.S. Senator Ron Johnson (R-Wis.), an outspoken advocate for Covid vaccine-injured patients, Bartiromo queried, “Senator, I want to ask you if this is all about money?” He answered, “I don’t know what other explanation there really would be.”

The True Motive

Big Pharma profits may be a perk to pandemic perpetrators, but do they account for other aspects of the debacle besides coverup of effective treatments? Is there a more comprehensive explanation for taxpayer-funded gain-of-function research, economy-crippling lockdowns, irrational enforcement of unhealthy and ineffective masking and quarantines, draconian mandates for experimental vaccines, and the media whitewash of rampant adverse effects reported in their wake to the U.S. government’s Vaccine Adverse Event Reporting System (VAERS)?

There is, and that explanation is found in the pages of End Game: COVID and the Dark State Quest for Bio-digital Convergence in a Transhumanist World. Author Dennis Behreandt, publisher of The New American, offers a chilling yet frighteningly plausible account of the nefarious goals of the power elite behind Covid-19.

His page-turner first leads readers through the alarming history of worldwide depopulation and eugenics movements along with the modern quest for secular perfection and immortality known as transhumanism, a crusade popular among those Behreandt identifies as “the elite technocratic controllers.” These world leaders and policy influencers include the likes of Bill Gates, George Soros, and other lesser-known yet dedicated modern advocates of population reduction. They have long-standing partnerships with the UN and other government agencies worldwide — including NIAID — to forward their anti-human agenda through measures such as abortion, eugenics, sterilization, and even vaccines.

Is this tin-foil-hat paranoia? Consider admissions such as that of late U.S. Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg to The New York Times Magazine. She justified legalized abortion, noting “concern about population growth and particularly growth in populations that we don’t want to have too many of.” Nor was it a slip of the tongue during her 2016 presidential campaign when Hillary Clinton called a quarter of Americans an “irredeemable ... basket of deplorables,” her vicious term for the “useless eaters” of Nazi Germany, those labeled as the “unfit ... overbreeding ... working class” by Planned Parenthood founder Margaret Sanger, and the “redundant population” of eugenics pioneer Thomas Malthus.

During 2020, government arbitrarily branded a vast number of individuals as “non-essential,” the latest term in this evolving genocidal vocabulary. Behreandt points out the even more startling fact that most people meekly accepted the disdainful slur. The land of the free and the home of the brave has become a mask-shackled, shoulder-jabbed, faint-hearted nation.

It's also a shrinking nation. Data released in the U.S. Census Bureau's December Vintage 2021 Population Estimates reveal that U.S. population growth rates have been in steep decline for decades. Last year they sank to the lowest since the nation's founding, notes the bureau's press release, mostly due to lower birth rates and the nation's aging baby boomers. The Office of Population Affairs, an Orwellian-named arm of the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services established to promote abortion and sterilization, has indeed been effective.

Could Covid and its vaccines help accelerate the entrenched depopulation agenda? And if so, how could a population-depleted dystopia possibly improve the standard of living of those seeking it? Behreandt postulates that Covid could well be forwarding the goals of modern international elites who, as their murderous forebears in Hitler's Germany, Stalin's Soviet Union, and Mao Tse-tung's Communist China, seek to rid the world of those judged undesirable. These modern misanthropic elitists also look to technology to perfect and immortalize themselves.

No, Behreandt's End Game is not science fiction; his book presents real-life evidence of the transhuman agenda of wealthy, warped minds at the helm of Big Tech. An example is Singularity University, formed in 2012 by major corporate partners including Google, LinkedIn, and Nokia. Its chancellor is transhumanist Ray Kurzweil, who envisions a future in which humans are supposedly perfected and their lives extended through merger of man and machine. "We are becoming cyborgs," he wrote in his 2005 book The Singularity Is Near. His forecast date of this technological "Singularity" is 2045, a prediction that inspired Russian billionaire Dmitry Itskov to found the 2045 Initiative, with the amoral goal of developing an avatar to replace the human body so people can live forever.

If that sounds ludicrous, consider the Vatican's 2018 seminar titled "The Morality of Immortality," at which former NIH director Collins presented results of gene-editing in roundworms that has extended their lifespans up to five-fold. "Imagine applying that to humans," he effused, as quoted on the blog of Singularity Group founder and 2045 Initiative promoter Peter Diamandis, who said that participants optimistically speculated about the potential of indefinite life extension.

Their longevity plans involve nanotechnology, described on the U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention website as "manipulation of matter on a near atomic scale." While such advances could have life-enhancing medical benefits such as treating neurological and genetic disease, the U.S. military's Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency (DARPA) is already exploiting nanotech as part of its brain-machine interface venture. Dubbed BrainSTORMS (Brain System to Transmit or Receive Magnetolectric Signals), the project aims to allow soldiers injected with nanoparticles to telepathically communicate with military computer systems. Of particular alarm is the technology's ability for two-way interaction. Behreandt quotes a 2019 agency press release bragging that researchers had already achieved "precise reading and writing to neurons" and planned "human demonstrations."

Yet while DARPA is reading minds and NIH is editing life-extending genes, the U.S. Food and Drug Administration (FDA) claims that it can't handle a FOIA request until 2076 for documentation on the first vaccine it approved: Pfizer, the VAERS record-holder for reported deaths and other severe side effects. A U.S. district court order is forcing the agency to comply in coming months. Of particular interest will be the list of ingredients, especially in light of the eerie parallel of mind-controlling nanoparticles injected into our military personnel coupled with the worldwide maniacal push for experimental vaccine mandates. On his blog, Aaron Siri, attorney for the FOIA suit plaintiffs, scolded the FDA for attempting "to hide the data by waiting ... until almost every American alive today is dead."

Or perhaps just until the undesirables are dead, for according to Behreandt, the technocrats' earthly paradise does not include non-essentials. Again, this seems hyperbolic, but recent advances in artificial intelligence (AI) are poised to outstrip and replace a large percentage of the human workforce, in less time than the FDA says it needs to zip file the Pfizer paperwork. Though past technological advances replaced human physical power, AI replaces intellectual power, as in the case of autonomous vehicles transforming the trucking industry. Google's self-driving Waymo trucks are already filling pandemic-induced supply-chain shortages in a pilot program in Arizona. Phoenix's CBS News affiliate quoted an industry expert who predicted that eventually drivers will be obsolete. Likewise, "autonomous shipping is the future of the maritime industry," announced Rolls-Royce Marine president Mikael Makinen in 2016. Behreandt says the trend will impact most job categories, quoting former executive editor of Wired magazine Kevin Kelly from his book The Inevitable that, "before the end of this century, 70 percent of today's occupations will ... be replaced by automation." Just as automobiles and tractors replaced horses a century ago, leading to an equine population collapse, "Could a similar fate befall the human species?" ponders Oxford University professor Nick Bostrom in his book Superintelligence.

The Outcome

The above only scratches the surface of Behreandt's exposé indicating that Covid-19 is accelerating the international elite toward their grave new world. To skeptics, he points out that a mere four months after the World Health Organization declared the pandemic, World Economic Forum (WEF) luminaries Klaus Schwab and Thierry Malleret published COVID-19: The Great Reset, an enthusiastic review of how the disaster is promoting societal transformation envisioned by globalist oligarchs and how their so-called Fourth Industrial Revolution will perfect those deemed necessary for the future. "The pandemic represents a rare but narrow window of opportunity to reflect, reimagine and reset our world," gushes Schwab on the WEF website. Meanwhile, everywhere freedoms are being stripped from the demonized unvaccinated. Are they the unnecessary deplorables of the techno-dystopian future?

Such a vision is hardly inevitable reality, says Behreandt, whose solution may surprise readers with its logical simplicity. Without giving away the ending (spoiler alert — victory is possible), the answer is here at home in the United States, where the rule of law still stands as a firewall protecting those willing to defend their rights, and to which the rest of the world turns expectantly. "If the Constitution falls here, freedom fails everywhere," contends Behreandt.

His best endorsement is perhaps the powerful description of America's world-wide importance made during the Cold War by Lutheran minister Richard Wurmbrand after spending 14 years in a Romanian prison for his Christian faith, from his letters quoted in William Federer's book America's God and Country:

Every freedom-loving man has two fatherlands, his own and America. Today, America is the hope of every enslaved man, because it is the last bastion of freedom in the world.... If it crumples, there is ... no other line of defense to fall back upon.

America is the last hope of millions of enslaved peoples. They look to it as their second fatherland. In it lies their hopes and prayers. I have seen fellow-prisoners in Communist prisons beaten, tortured, with 50 pounds of chains on their legs — praying for America ... that the dike will not crumble; that it will remain free.
