The War on Family

This special issue of The New American contains evidence from renowned professionals braving the establishment to call out Covid and the so-called Covid vaccines as biowarfare. Since the introduction of “the jab” in late 2020, significant statistics have been moving in the wrong direction: increasing death rates, spikes in chronic diseases, a pandemic of infertility, etc. Those who point out these facts are stifled and marked as deniers, haters, and spreaders of disinformation.

Yet these problems didn’t start with masks, lockdowns, and jabs. Covid is following the age-old game plan in the depopulationist war against humanity, which targets families to bring about its destructive aims. In 2020 and 2021, the journal Frontiers in Psychology frequently reported rampant lockdown-imposed psychological distress. The National Institute of Mental Health noted in 2023 that the “youth suicide rate increased during the Covid-19 pandemic,” while Washington University in St. Louis reported on the marked surge in domestic violence reports. Is it any wonder that so many clamored for the touted solution to the madness, allowing themselves to be injected with a novel and (as it turns out) lethal “vaccine”?

This war on families began thousands of years ago in the Garden of Eden, when Satan used Adam’s wife against him, whispering the first lie to her in order to subvert and entrap her husband. Ever since, mankind has been paying the price for heeding the “father” of lies, whom Our Lord called out in speaking to the Deep State operatives of His own day: “You are of your father, the devil, and the desires of your father you will do. He was a murderer from the beginning ... for he is a liar, and the father thereof.” (John 8:44)

Should we be surprised that the spiritual sons of this “murderer” are following suit, targeting the family to destroy the earth? They’ve been honing their skills for centuries.

The devil’s progeny have often used wars, concocted famines, and genocide to carry out their aims, wiping out great swaths of the population at once, causing even more long-term harm through ensuing disintegration of family and culture. For example, both World Wars sparked critical declines in population, not only due to battlefield deaths, but also due to subsequent declines in fertility rates, according to the U.K.’s Royal Society. John Birch Society founder Robert Welch wrote in 1976 that one of the reasons internationalist plotters inflicted these “artificially and deliberately contrived” conflicts on the “civilized” world was “to break down traditional morals, customs and values as much as possible; and to break up loyalties, relationships and circumstances that men had come to think of as permanent and stable for the future.”

Destruction of an entire society is also the legacy of the Ukrainian famine of 1932-33. The Soviet government under Joseph Stalin conducted this deliberate extermination, or Holodomor, which claimed millions of lives. But survivors envied the dead, left as they were to deal with lasting consequences, which, according to the Holodomor Research and Education Consortium, included the disintegration of families through untimely deaths, forced resettlement, and millions of orphaned children. “It created a discontinuity in the normal development of the Ukrainian people,” wrote Irena Chalupa for Radio Free Europe, “wip[ing] out millions of nationally conscious Ukrainians” and leaving only “the surviving structures of Soviet Ukraine.” The affected generations did not survive to pass on their knowledge and culture.

Far from stirring pity and remorse, horrific outcomes such as these only serve to whet bloodthirsty, eugenic appetites. Thus the development of biological warfare, since depopulationists know that diseases have statistically been even more effective than war at annihilating people and destroying culture. Primitive attempts were relatively modest. The first on record occurred during the Siege of Caffa in 1346, when Mongol hordes catapulted plague-infested corpses into the walled Genoese city to spread the Black Death among its inhabitants. A similar tactic is believed to have been employed with smallpox-infested blankets distributed to Native American tribes by British forces during the Siege of Fort Pitt in 1763.

Since then, the enemies of mankind have dreamt grander nightmares. In the foreword to the 1986 book People as Animals, the late Prince Philip of England, a radical environmentalist, fantasized about his own personal “reincarnation as a particularly deadly virus,” and five years later, famed oceanographer Jacques Cousteau asked the UNESCO Courier: “Should we eliminate suffering, disease? The idea is beautiful, but perhaps not a benefit for the long term.... In order to stabilize world population, we must eliminate 350,000 people per day.” As if vying to fulfill these dreams, man-made viruses — and the “vaccines” hyped as their remedies — are the latest weapons added to the deadly depopulationist arsenal.

Modern Holocaust

However, no war, famine, genocide, or bioweapon has ever come close to the extermination wrought by the modern holocaust of unbridled abortion and artificial contraception, which together claim untold numbers. The World Health Organization brags that more than 73 million abortions take place annually worldwide. To put that number in understandable terms, it is equivalent to crashing 1,278 Boeing 737s full of children every single day. Even that amounts to a mere a fraction of the lives lost to abortifacient birth-control methods.

Less than a century ago, few countries worldwide allowed abortion, and primitive birth-control methods remained stigmatized. Today, only a handful of countries ban infanticide, while contraceptives are ubiquitous.

These astonishing about-faces occurred during the latter half of the 20th century, thanks to eugenicists heavily funded by Rockefeller and Ford interests. Linda Royall, author of Sacrifice: The Abortion Conspiracy, notes that when leading 20th-century eugenics advocate Margaret Sanger founded the International Planned Parenthood Federation (IPPF) in 1954, the depopulation-promoting Neo-Malthusian League was simultaneously dissolved, “and all their clinics for abortion and sterilization, along with organization funds, were rolled under IPPF.” Today, the organization is the world’s leading provider of abortion and birth control.

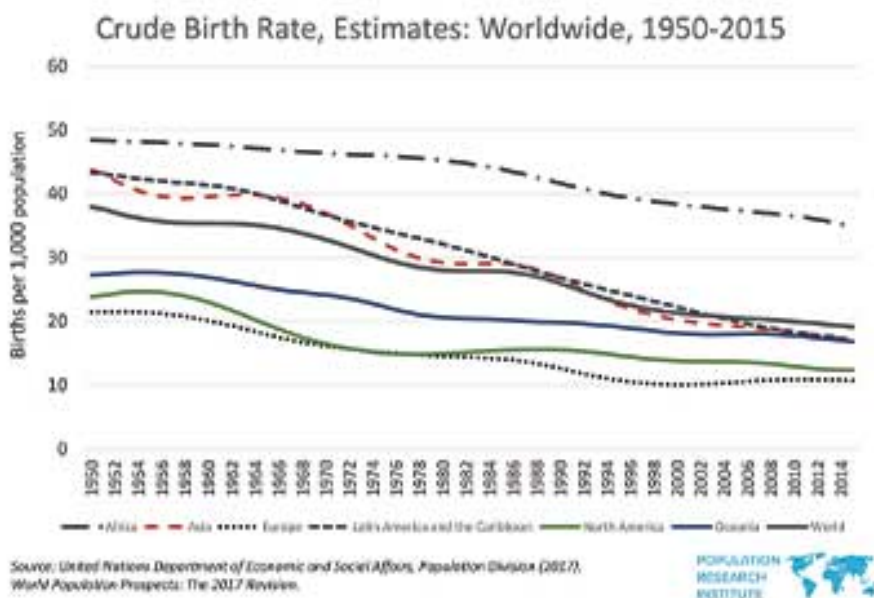

Annual abortion and contraceptive statistics represent more than individual lives lost. Families are decimated or even destroyed by these means, and because the family is the building block of society and the cornerstone of culture, civilization is ravaged as well.

Birth rates worldwide have predictably nosedived since IPPF’s unholy advent, according to data from the Population Division of the UN Department of Economic and Social Affairs. The average fertility rate in a majority of countries is now less than two children per woman, whereas in the 1950s it was more than four. Today’s low rates, warns the Population Research Institute, mean that each preceding generation is failing to replace itself; infrastructures and economies are increasingly strained, and cultures are dying. Even liberal outlets express concern. A kinship study published in December’s Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences USA projected a global 38-percent decline in living relatives for individuals aged 65 by the year 2095, as compared to 1950. In some countries, such as Canada, the percentage climbs to a mind-numbing 76-percent decline.

Vice as a Weapon

This destructive transformation has happened gradually over the course of many decades, with the initiating cause long separated from its catastrophic effects and therefore more difficult to pinpoint. The culprit is more clearly seen by way of a striking analogy. In a 2003 Newsweek article titled “Iraqi Vice,” Christian Caryl described what happened to that country after the sudden influx of “Western” influence following Operation Iraqi Freedom, which “liberated” its inhabitants from Saddam Hussein’s dictatorial grasp.

“Before the invasion, Iraq was one of the world’s most tightly controlled societies,” Caryl notes. Alcohol was severely restricted, pornography and immoral entertainment were banned, illegal drug use was virtually unknown, and “convicted prostitutes could be beheaded.”

Enter the liberating armies of the United States, and liquor stores, porn shops, and adult cinemas materialized overnight. Hard-core drug use exploded, as did prostitution, while overall crime skyrocketed. “Some people say the spread of such things is designed to weaken our society,” Caryl quoted Baghdad police chief Colonel Daoud Selman. “Every day we hear it from people on the street,” he said. “Not just the religious people, but ordinary ones, too.”

Not-so-ordinary people also realize that freedom uncoupled from morality means slavery to vice. Less than one year prior to the invasion of Iraq, former and future Israeli Prime Minister Benjamin Netanyahu suggested that the United States could topple Iran’s Islamic regime by transmitting lewd programming via satellite television into the country. In testimony before the U.S. House Government Reform Committee, Netanyahu offered as examples two popular shows of that decade — Melrose Place and Beverly Hills 90210 — calling their beautiful, scantily-clad, materialistic, and promiscuous stars “pretty subversive stuff,” well-suited to corrupt Iranian youth. By that corruption, the country would collapse, he reasoned.

Will the Cradle Fall?

Our descent from a nation of virtue into a cauldron of vice happened more slowly. What bitter irony that the destruction was wrought by the hand that is supposed to rock the cradle.

The modern feminist movement sprang from agitation for women’s suffrage, which was fueled by the same oligarchs who staged the financial takeover of America, using their wives as frontmen for top-down social engineering. Narcissa Cox Vanderlip, wife of Federal Reserve co-founder Frank Vanderlip, was among the largest financial contributors to the movement. Another wealthy suffragette philanthropist, Alva Vanderbilt Belmont, was married to Oliver Belmont, who helped usher in the income tax and whose father had immigrated to the United States as a Rothschild agent.

“We don’t tend to teach about the suffrage movement as a major lobbying force, a major well-funded organization in American political history — but it was,” Corrine McConnaughey told business media outlet Marketplace. The George Washington University professor continued, “You’re talking money on the order of what the major political parties had to spend. This is not just a few ladies sitting around signing petitions.”

Their campaigning was deceitfully contrived. Prior to ratification of the 19th Amendment in 1920, women already enjoyed full voting privileges in many states and territories, and some even held public office. Indeed, whether one could vote oftentimes depended not on gender but, more logically, on real-estate ownership, and was appropriately a decision left to states and localities.

Regardless, most women were not agitating for suffrage. The movement was a well-subsidized propaganda campaign that spawned militant feminism, which succeeded in convincing women to be dissatisfied with their exalted positions as mothers and homemakers, to demote themselves to “equal rights” with men, to begin acting like men, then dressing like men, and finally, courtesy of the transgender movement, to actually believe they are men.

Meanwhile, mothers have let go of their cradles, leaving the relatively few remaining to be rocked by the sinister hand of the state — a state that now “rules the world” with its anti-family obsessions: infertility, divorce, promiscuity, sex education, sodomitical unions, pornography, transgender issues, human and drug trafficking, and suppression of truth. Each of these exponentially accelerates our depopulation trajectory.

The solution is evident. Only a return to godly virtue can save our nation, with special adherence to one of His first commands: “Be fruitful and multiply” within the confines of canonical marriage. Our future literally depends on it.
