Why Malign Trump?

William Jasper's June 6 "Trump" article ("Trump: Will He Be Controlling or Controlled?") was very disappointing, coming from The John Birch Society. Early in the article, Jasper disavows Trump, and then goes on to agree with the mainstream media that Trump is "crass, crude, vulgar." Jasper may as well have said, "don't vote for Trump." For years the Society has vocally condemned all the "Free Trade" agreements that the United States has entered, has been very critical of the onslaught of illegal immigrants into the United States and Europe, has been very critical of the Washington "insiders," has been pro Second Amendment, etc. Here comes Trump espousing the very same ideals that the Society has vocalized for years, and Jasper essentially maligns him.

This is puzzling at the very least. Trump sounds more conservative and patriotic than many voters have heard since Reagan. I would've expected the Society to endorse Trump at this point. By casting such an obvious shadow of doubt about Trump, the Society is de facto endorsing Hillary. The Society needs to figure out what it wants to be — an eternal critic or a pragmatic guiding light. Good luck finding the perfect candidate who can win in November.

The editors — The New American does not endorse candidates; we endorse or criticize policies. In telling his feelings about Trump, the author makes clear that though he is not a fan of Trump, as a person, because he is morally flawed, Trump may have more good to offer than bad. And in the article, the author did say that if Trump would hold firm on his positions on "illegal immigration and the dangerous 'free trade' agenda, as typified by the pending Trans-Pacific partnership (TPP) ... he would set back the destructive agenda of the 'insider' politicians by at least several years." The letter writer rightly stated we would support such measures.

Daring Denial

World-renowned physicist and Nobel Laureate Richard Feynman's admonition has been largely discarded in the halls of academia. "I would rather have questions that can't be answered," he said, "than answers that can't be questioned." Sadly, answers that none dare question now dominate classroom life led by liberals, progressives, socialists, communists, Marxists, "social sciences" professors, Democrats, union goons, and others of this once-free country. The main vehicle today for this war on dissent is the global-warming hoax which, after 20 consecutive years of global cooling — had to be renamed "climate change" by the coterie of government-paid drones (sucking up $25 billion per year of taxpayers' money) under the supervision of the UN socialist IPCC (Intergovernmental Panel on Climate Change).

In preparation for the UN's Paris Conference last December, the fakers had to "recalibrate their instruments," and "refine their computer models" to "demonstrate further warming" retroactively. A number of our socialist Marxist attorneys general are now getting ready to sue doubters; well, there are some 32,000 such scientists and professionals to be sued. Their names can be found on the Internet under "Oregon Petition" and "Manhattan Declaration." And I am one of them: M.S., Ph.D., Engineering,

UCLA, with specialties in heat & mass transfer and in thermodynamics. Hello, sue me if you dare!

A growing number of our universities are also preparing to forbid access to their students by those “criminal doubters and deniers.” That is just a sick repetition of medieval religious inquisition courts against the non-believers, and of Stalin’s show-trials against non-conformists.
