Manipulating African American Voters

For 50 years, African Americans have voted for Democrats. Seventy to 90 percent of African American voters vote Democrat every election cycle. The Democrats have broken the race code, and use it against African Americans every election.

Justifiably, African Americans are angry and disappointed by their opportunities in America. Broken homes, failing and unsafe schools, lack of jobs, and crime and drugs are all part of the African American reality. If you combine that with America's historically shameful treatment of African Americans as slaves and second-class humans, it is understandable why the Democrat formula has been so successful.

The formula is a simple one, but it requires the Democrats to get African Americans so enraged every election cycle that they come out in large numbers to vote for more of the same.

There is no group in America that is more justifiably sensitive to racism than African Americans. The Democrats know this and "play the race card" every election in the hope that personal rage will blind African American voters to the reality of what is being done to them.

This election cycle it is the Black Lives Matter movement stoking the rage. The administration and every Democratic candidate for president have amplified this movement in an effort to build that critical anger. The bulk of BLM's issues takes place in communities controlled by Democratic mayors, congressmen, and governors. One might think that most elected officials would not want to bring up their own failures, but such thinking misses the magic behind the Democratic strategy: Create a problem, amplify it, and pretend to support a solution for it. By default, the other party's lack of pandering to the problem must indicate that it does not care. It must be racist.

Democrats use the same strategy each election cycle and win. Why else would angry, disappointed African Americans vote for more of the same and expect a different outcome? Behind closed doors I suspect the Democratic leadership has a good belly laugh at this, every election.

Let's just look at the facts. Democrats control most inner-city communities. The communities are high-crime areas with major drug issues and failing schools and no jobs. These same Democrats use all their political power to kill any school choice and will do almost anything they can to keep African Americans in those failing schools. Democrats support trade policies that have decimated the jobs in those communities, and add regulatory and tax barriers for any new businesses that may consider opening. They raise the wage rates so high that no business can afford to open in those communities. Their open-border policy guarantees the continuation of gang violence, drugs, and crime, while stretching minimal police coverage to its limits.

Add 50 years of broken promises, and you would have the African American Democratic platform.

Now let's look at the alternative voting option. Tighten border controls, strangle off the drug flow, and reduce the number of illegal alien gang members flooding our cities. Cancel or rewrite trade policies to encourage manufacturing and other high-paying jobs in our communities. Deport illegal aliens who break the law. Change the tax and regulatory policies that discourage the opening of new businesses.

Umm, it is pretty clear that the other party offers more for African Americans than the Democrats, but that party is deemed racist. It doesn't care about the Black Lives Matter issues as much. Get it? It is all about creating a race-based issue.

Black voters will be lining up this election day the same as they have for 50 years asking, "Please sir, may I have more of the same?"

Every election cycle is a big payday for black leaders. Some are so filled with anger that they gladly support the Democrats, while others understand what is happening but value their payday more than the fate of their people.

What do you call someone who does the same thing over and over but expects a different outcome? Behind closed doors the Democrats whisper the answer to that question.
