Making Up Hate

Christian Gomez's April 8 piece on hate hoaxes kept impressively detailed score of the "pseudo-crimes" perpetrated across the country by the Left. These hoaxes pile up fast because they make leftist activists feel relevant — there's a crusade to wage, after all.

In a sense, these leftists are victims of their own sociopolitical hegemony — most regular Americans are so cowed by "political correctness" that transgressions must be manufactured in order to keep the donations rolling in and the "diversity seminars" staffed.

Questioning the veracity of these "crimes" is considered taboo, lest someone feel that their "lived experience" has not been treated with proper deference. Indeed, the Left's claims regarding "hate crimes" are inherently non-falsifiable, since the definition of hate, or the myriad accompanying buzzwords ending in "-ist" or "-phobe," lacks any specificity or stability.

Bird Brained

The article "An Open Letter to Alexandria Ocasio-Cortez" in the March 4 issue — which explains the environmental and economic costs of trying to use "Green Energy" to power the United States — left out how wind turbines and solar arrays affect our flying friends. Wind turbines are very efficient at chopping up birds. The birds involved are often eagles and hawks.

If an American citizen kills an eagle, the government will come down on him like a ton of bricks, and he will be lucky if he merely gets heavily fined, instead of ending up in prison. Yet wind-turbine operators are given waivers by the government to kill the birds, waivers not available to the ordinary citizen.

Then there are the solar turbines. They often consist of a mirror array focusing sunlight on a steam boiler on an elevated tower. The boiler produces steam, which drives a turbine. There is one of these plants adjacent to I-15 by the California and Nevada border. If you look up at the boiler while you are driving by, you might see puffs of white smoke. The white smoke is a feathered friend being incinerated. The only good thing for the bird is that the incineration is instantaneous.

The wind turbines are also efficient at chopping up bats.

Achieving Democrat One-party Monopoly

Democrats are following steps to achieve democratic socialism:

1. Refuse to build the wall and refuse to hire enough Border Patrol agents.
2. Allow illegal aliens to become citizens who can vote in all elections.

3. Lower the minimum voting age to 16.
4. Allow convicted felons to vote.
5. Allow personal computers to be used for voting.
6. Radically change the U.S. Supreme Court by adding more justices who will be appointed by a new president, and abolish lifetime appointments.
7. Eliminate the Electoral College and replace it with the popular vote so that the big-city liberal states such as New York and California can win presidential elections.
8. Merge the United States with Canada and Mexico into a "North American Union."
9. Write a whole new U.S. Constitution at a new Constitutional Convention, recognizing a one-world international government (United Nations) and abolish the Bill of Rights so that it will no longer protect our God-given individual rights.

Remember the saying: "If you give them an inch, they'll take a mile."
