Upping the Kill Rate

Killing has become big business with major political clout. Its growth is about power, plain and simple. Abortion provides big money. Big money wins elections.

On September 26, 1996, Wisconsin's then-Senator Russ Feingold was unable to say on the U.S. Senate floor whether his support for "partial-birth" abortion would preclude the killing of a newborn baby.

Now events show that what once may have been discussed in only committees or covens is mainstream thinking at the top of our political and media chains.

As a person born with a physical disability, it is chilling to me, but not surprising, to hear Virginia Governor Ralph Northam's comments about the abortion process: "If a mother is in labor, I can tell you exactly what would happen: The infant would be delivered. The infant would be kept comfortable. The infant would be resuscitated if that's what the mother and the family desired, and then a discussion would ensue between the physician and the mother" — about whether the child would then be killed or not.

Note, this newly born citizen apparently has no constitutional right to a lawyer, judge, or jury before being killed for no crime.

Governors in New York and Rhode Island have supported similar legislation.

The agenda is two-fold: Gain pro-abortion votes and do away with the unwanted. Planned Parenthood founder Margaret Sanger wanted to eliminate "human weeds" and minorities.

In 2009, Supreme Court Justice Ruth Bader Ginsburg told New York Time Magazine reporter Emily Bazelon: "Frankly, I had thought at the time Roe [v. Wade] was decided, there was a concern about population growth and particularly growth in populations that we don't want too many of." One wonders which "populations" Ginsburg wishes to see eliminated.

African-American organizations such as Maafa 21 understand that the result has been an ongoing genocide of blacks.

The National Socialists of the 1930s coined the term "life unworthy of life." I'm sure I fit this category by their standards, although my wife and children would disagree.

National Socialist and author of Germany's eugenics laws Ernst Rudin's call for "racial purity" was published in Margaret Sanger's Birth Control Review. Yet still today, socialists are too blind to value life.

Our government now gives $500 million per year to Planned Parenthood, which earns $1.5 billion per year. On January 8, Planned Parenthood President Leana Wen stated, "Our core mission is providing, protecting and expanding access to abortion."

The targets of the death dealers have grown: Medical "bio-ethicist" Ezekiel Emanuel, who advised "health" panels for both the Clinton and Obama administrations, wrote in a 2009 Lancet medical journal about rationing healthcare via death panels.

Emanuel later wrote that everyone should die at 75. (No word from the 85-year-old Ginsburg.)

Then there's Duke University's Walter Sinnott-Armstrong and the National Institute of Health's Franklin Miller, who coauthored a 2013 article in the British Journal of Medical Ethics entitled "What Makes Killing Wrong?" In that piece, it states that it's not wrong to kill a person who is not "benefitting" society. The example was a comatose person who could (should?) be killed in order to harvest the person's organs so as to "benefit" society, rather than be a "drain."

Now there is even a court case involving abortion providers admitting on videotape that they sell human body parts, a case in which a judge with ties to Planned Parenthood, U.S. District Judge William Orrick, has put a "gag order" on the videos.

Bloodlust is insatiable; one never gets enough. Perhaps people will pay attention if "Planned Elderhood" should become a reality. But by then, it may be too late. Time and citizen apathy will tell.
