Mercury in Vaccines

I found the cover story to the May 6 issue of TNA entitled “Forced Vaccinations” to be commendable. There’s one caveat: The article says, “Notably absent from the table is autism, which many physicians link to thimerosal, a mercury preservative in several vaccines, including MMR.” Not so. Thimerosal is not in the MMR shot because the vaccine has live viruses in it, and the mercury would kill them. The MMR’s true function, however, is just as deadly.

All live-virus vaccines contain glutamic acid (MSG), which acts as a stabilizer (feeder) of the viruses. MSG is also a precursor of a substance called glutathione, which helps the body excrete heavy metals and toxins. Glutamic acid in an injected vaccine, which the body’s immune system would react against, would tend to inhibit the production of glutathione at the best of times. If a live-virus vaccine such as the MMR were given at the same time as a vaccine that contained mercury, e.g., the flu shot, the interaction would tend to inhibit the body’s ability to excrete the mercury. The result would be, among other potential deleterious conditions, brain damage.

The MMR is associated with the likes of autism, just in a different way from what is suggested in this highly important article.

The Blame Game

I had a hangnail last week, and I definitely know it was Trump’s fault — no question about it! Anti-Trump rhetoric is this silly.

Our country has endemic, systemic problems that have developed over many years. Does it seem logical that these are all the fault of Donald Trump, one person who has held office for a little over two years?

We have problems with debt, education, poverty, perceived racism, and wars all over the world. Is all this rhetoric logical?

Notwithstanding the problems and constant complaints about the president, America is still the one country to which most people want to immigrate.

Why? The problems in this country pale in comparison with most of the world. So gripers should ask: By playing the blame game are we really helping solve the problems? Does losing an election by one party justify bringing our entire system to a halt? Does losing justify not working together to solve our problems?

When you have more loyalty to your party than to your country, perhaps your value system needs some adjustment.

Vote Responsibly, or Else

If we support the wrong candidates, or if we do not vote at all against the wrong candidates, this is what the Democrats and RINOs would do to us:

Raise our taxes; invade our privacy; shut down pro-freedom websites; outlaw and confiscate our guns; charge us with crimes and put us in jail; impeach our president and Supreme Court Justice Kavanaugh; increase state and federal spending; foreclose on our homes through eminent domain; increase crime, criminals, illegal drugs, and disease spread by opening our borders; merge the United States with Mexico and Canada to form a single “North American Union”; get us into an undeclared, no-win war that could lead to World War III; and turn the United States of America into a communist country by surrendering to a world communist government (United Nations).

Balanced Budget Con

One of the main arguments for a Con-Con is the Balanced Budget Amendment (BBA). I have three questions concerning a BBA. They are:

1. If the crooks and mental midgets in D.C. do not follow the Constitution now, why would they follow an additional amendment?
2. Who determines if the budget is balanced?
3. If the budget is not balanced, will SCOTUS order a tax increase?
