The two-party illusion in politics is becoming clearer by the day. Republicans and Democrats campaign on the opposite ends of the spectrum regarding abortion, border security, spending, and foreign policy.

At times, it appears the two parties could not be further apart.

However, once elections are over, campaign promises are often left unfulfilled, and the Deep State establishment plows forward, regardless of who wins.

This facade of choice is by design, explain The New American's Paul Dragu and Alex Newman on Behind The Deep State, and it must be stopped.

Dragu, who authored the article "The Two-Party Illusion" in The New American's Conspiracy for Global Control special edition, articulates the problem and offers real solutions.

Thankfully, not all is lost. By using the Constitution and tools like The New American's Freedom Index — which scores legislators based on their constitutional voting record — we can defeat the Uniparty's stranglehold on our government.

But the first step in taking down the Uniparty is education. Don't miss this insightful analysis.
