“Trans” Violence Phenomenon: Man Claiming Womanhood Brutally Kills Postal Worker

Is it that they have the emotionalism of a woman and the aggression of a man, as an observer once suggested? Or is it that, as poet William Blake put it, the “eye altering alters all”? Or is it both — or something else?

Whatever the explanation, there’s been another case of violence committed by a MUSS (Made-up Sexual Status, aka “transgender”) individual. Contrary to mainstream media narrative, too, it’s part of a phenomenon in which MUSS individuals are more likely to kill than be killed and are even overrepresented among pedophiles, according to a 2019 report.

That Spiking “Female” Crime

As for the current case, the New York Post reported last Friday, incorrectly describing the MUSS perp with feminine pronouns:

Postal worker Ray Hodges was only trying to order at his regular bodega, when he ran into a crazed maniac....

The 36-year-old had just delivered a package and was taking a break in during his work day Thursday, when he ducked into Joe’s Deli Grocery in Harlem and suddenly crossed paths with repeat criminal Jaia Cruz.

Witnesses said they soon became embroiled in an argument as Cruz — who has been described by cops as a transgender woman — tried to push her way in front of the mailman.

To make a longer story shorter, an argument ensued and, as the Post related in a later article:

Cruz quickly became enraged, spit in Hodge’s face and gutted him in the stomach, police said. He was rushed to Harlem Hospital, where he died, cops said.

Even before the heinous Harlem slaying Cruz had a rap sheet with five arrests, including once in July 2020 for waving an open box cutter at a person in Midtown West and shouting “I’m going to cut him,” according to police sources.

Cruz can be seen in the nine-second video below, which the Post describes as “creepy.” Don’t let his appearance fool you, though. As is witnessed in the picture beneath the video, he towers over the law enforcement officers by his side.

UPDATE: Jaia Cruz, initially reported as a “woman,” has been identified as Alvin Cruz, a 24-year-old transgender, accused of fatally stabbing a postal worker in Harlem.

Cruz is charged with first degree murder and has two prior arrests in 2020 for incidents that involved knives. <https://t.co/scByrcUpCJ> pic.twitter.com/6o3rbI5l1k

Of course, much could be noted here. For one thing, given Cruz’s history, was he only still on the street because of NYC’s now infamous slap-on-the-wrist “justice”? Then there’s that bigger issue, however, the pink bull elephant in the room.

Inverting Reality

If you listen to the mainstream media (which, mercifully, fewer people are doing all the time), you’d think MUSS people are under unique threat. You may even believe there’s a “trans genocide.” This is far from the Truth.

As WorldNetDaily informed in 2019:

A new report documents how a transsexual in Colorado and a partner shot nine students at their school, then later claimed the victims deserved it for their “transphobia.”

In Maine, a transgender defended the murder of two parents because they failed to “accept” the ...”transition.”

And in Maryland, a transgender who also was a mass shooter killed three before using the gun for suicide.

Such violence isn’t unusual, according to a report by the website National Justice.

The site said “individuals identifying as transgender are not only less likely to be victims of murder than biological women (and far less than men), their small population is well represented among murderers, serial killers and pedophiles.”

“The Human Rights Campaign, which meticulously tracks transgender deaths across the country, is conspicuously not tracking them when they commit crimes. But in the U.K., analysts found that during the period of 2007-2017, transsexuals were 58% more likely to commit a murder than be murdered,” the report said.

More Evidence

Then there’s the evidence presented by reporter Andy Ngo, famous for covering Antifa riots. While appearing on Fox News’ Tucker Carlson Tonight last March, he stated that sometimes MUSS (Made-up Sexual Status, aka anomalous-“gender”) individuals would constitute as much as 20 percent of the rioters at a given locale. This is, of course, far above MUSS individuals’ percentage of the wider population.

What’s more, there are “mountains of evidence,” Ngo said, that people “who suffer from ‘gender dysphoria’ also suffer from very high rates of mental health comorbidities” (e.g., psychopathy).

This is not surprising. At issue, after all, are people so psychologically unwell that they believe they’re something they’re not. Given this, what are the chances they will be unwell in only one dimension?

Ngo also said in his Carlson interview that discovering MUSS individuals' rioter overrepresentation inspired him to investigate further. He then learned, he stated, of "peer reviewed research out of Canada found "on the Library of Medicine." It "shows that there is evidence that young transgender people are particularly vulnerable to violent radicalization," Ngo said.

Medical Malpractice

MUSS medical interventions — that is, Sexual Distortion Treatments (SDTs) — don't help, either. After all, hormones are powerful substances. So how does putting people on a cross-sex hormone regimen, along with perhaps other drugs, affect their mentality? Is giving an already disturbed individual a cocktail of medications designed to induce opposite-sex physical changes really a good idea?

Not according to studies cited by Gateway Pundit last year. They showed that MUSS women "undergoing testosterone injections and [the pretense of] transitioning to men experience increased rage and aggression," the site wrote.

Anecdotally speaking, my experience is that many MUSS individuals, especially those activism-minded, are in fact quite hostile. After I editorialized against their agenda some years back, one commented that he wanted my "head on a platter." Then there's the 2015 Dr. Drew show incident (video below), in which MUSS reporter "Zoey Tur" threatened to send commentator Ben Shapiro "home in an ambulance" (not very ladylike, for sure).

Really, though, is any of this surprising? At issue are troubled people, and troubled people are more likely to get into trouble — and to cause it.
