

USA Today Goes Pro-pedo. Deletes Tweets, Changes Headline After Twitter Explosion

USA Today might have one or more pedophiles working in its newsroom.

The national newspaper published, then deleted, several pro-pedo tweets yesterday about a story that justifies sexual attraction to children. It's the latest pedo scandal to engulf a major news organization.

CNN recently learned that two top producers were pedos; one was arrested and police are investigating the other.

Yet the CNN scandal and now USA Today's pro-pedo propaganda might have exposed a larger truth. Just as they've infiltrated Hollywood, pedos have apparently infiltrated the news industry.

The Story

The material in the story sounds like it was written by the “transgender” professor recently forced to quit Old Dominion University. He said pedos are “moral” as long as they don't act on their desire to have sex with kids.

Now, apparently, USA Today is waving the pedo pennant.

“Scientists who study the sexual disorder say it is also among the most misunderstood,” the story began. “Researchers who study pedophilia say the term describes an attraction, not an action, and using it interchangeably with ‘abuse’ fuels misperceptions.”

You know what's coming next: A long apology for the disturbed weirdos who want to have sex with children. Among the gems the newspaper disclosed were these:

Scientists have in recent decades improved their understanding of pedophilia's causes, prenatal and early childhood risk factors as well as how pedophiles can better control impulses.

One of the most significant findings is that scientists who study the disorder say pedophilia is determined in the womb, though environmental factors may influence whether someone acts on an urge to abuse.

When most of the public thinks of pedophilia, they assume it's synonymous with child sexual abuse. A pedophile is an adult who is sexually attracted to children, but not all pedophiles abuse kids, and some people who sexually abuse kids are not pedophiles.

And, of course, “they’re born that way.”

“The evidence suggests it is inborn. It’s neurological,” headshrinker James Cantor told the newspaper. Cantor is a “sex researcher and former editor-in-chief of, Sexual Abuse: A Journal of Research and Treatment.”

And it doesn’t matter whether the pedo is attracted to kids, USA Today assured readers:

Not all people who sexually abuse children are pedophiles. Some pedophiles never abuse children, experts say, and some people who sexually abuse children do not sexually prefer them, but use them as a surrogate for an adult partner. They may be disinhibited and anti-social, with impulse control problems.

Another skull doctor said some people molest kids “because of anger,” or “they’re scared of adult women,” or “to get revenge. But they don’t actually have an age preference for prepubescent children.”

But if they do prefer kids, that’s OK.

Researcher Michael Seto, of the Royal Ottawa Health Care Group in Canada, contradicted the “born that way” explanation inadvertently:

Seto said pedophilia is something people are born with or at least have a predisposition to. Evidence shows men are more likely to have pedophilia than women. This aligns with research showing men are more likely to have other paraphilias, including exhibitionism, voyeurism and sadism. Men are also more likely than women to commit criminal acts.

Research also offers insights into risk factors. Seto said men with pedophilia have a much higher incidence of early childhood head injury. One study on diagnosed pedophiles showed they are more likely to report their mothers had received psychiatric treatment, which suggests the disorder may be influenced by genetic factors.

Yet if pedos have a “much higher incidence of early childhood head injury,” then they weren’t “born that way.” The crack on the noggin did it. If Mom was a nutcase, the kid might be too, but not because of “genes.” Researchers have learned that mental illness is not only genetic but also contagious. Nurture, not just nature, affects a child’s future mental health.

The Tweets

USA Today tweeted a thread about pedos that included the “womb” theory and other quotes from the story, which was hidden behind a paywall.

Twitter exploded, and so the newspaper removed the paywall and killed the thread. “The initial thread lacked the context that was within the story and we made the decision to pull down the entire thread,” the newspaper tweeted.

Of course, it changed the headline, too, as Jack Posobiec observed. Original: “What the public keeps getting wrong about pedophilia.” New and improved: “The complicated research behind pedophilia.”

Given what has occurred at CNN, top execs at Gannett might consider an internal investigation to find out who conceived the story and why, and who approved it for publication.

In late December, Jake Tapper's producer, Rick Saleeby, quit the leftist network after Project Veritas outed him as a possible child rapist. That scandal was taking off as FBI agents arrested John Griffin, Chris Cuomo's former producer, for running a child-rape scheme out of his ski lodge in Vermont. He paid mothers for sex romps with their daughters.

Concerned students and a Twitter storm over pro-pedo propaganda forced ODU to cashier Professor Allyn Walker. The trouble for Walker began after an interview with ProStasia's Noah Berlatsky, who thinks pedos are a "stigmatized group." ProStasia publishes pro-pedo propaganda.

Walker, who bills himself as a "queer criminologist," tried to normalize pedos and said they must be called Minor-Attracted Persons, or MAPS.

Berlatksy has written for NBC and The Atlantic.

The number of pedos working at USA Today is unknown.
