

Written by Raven Clabough on March 24, 2021

Nebraska Dept. of Education Proposes Controversial New “Health” Standards

New standards proposed by the Nebraska Department of Education would teach children as young as kindergartners about sexuality and gender identity, the Daily Wire reports.

Under the new guidelines, students in kindergarten could be taught the “fundamental components of sexual health” and about “characteristics relating to identity, sexuality, and healthy relationships.” First- and second-graders would be taught about gender, gender identity, and gender roles, while third-graders would engage in discussions on the “range of ways people express their gender” and the impact of gender role “stereotypes” on behavior. Third-graders will also learn how to define “sexual orientation.” By fourth-grade, students will delve into discussions of transgenderism and should be able to “distinguish between sex assigned at birth and gender identity and explain how they may or may not differ.” In grade five, students will learn the “potential role of hormone blockers on young people who identify as transgender.” By sixth-grade, students will be able to distinguish between “cisgender, transgender, gender non-binary, gender expansive, and gender identity.”

Photo: fstop123 / iStock / Getty Images Plus

These “fundamentals” continue to be expounded upon throughout middle and secondary school under the proposed standards.

And while the standards are not enforceable and cannot be mandated to be implemented in local schools, they serve as potentially dangerous framework for course curricula. “These standards create a framework for teaching, learning and assessment, and they articulate a trajectory for knowledge and skill acquisition across all grade levels,” the introduction for the standards reads.

The curriculum is being heavily criticized by groups such as the Nebraska Catholic Conference, which contends the standards “promote a false understanding of God’s design for marriage and human sexuality” and “raise concerns about respecting the role of parents as the primary educators of their children.”

Written by Raven Clabough on March 24, 2021

The proposed standards have also been publicly opposed by Nebraska Governor Pete Ricketts.

"I am calling on the Nebraska Department of Education to scrap their proposed sex education topics that are included in their draft health standards," Ricketts said. "The new standards from the department would not only teach young children age-inappropriate content starting in kindergarten, but also inject a non-scientific shift in approach to health education, and many of the new themes are sensitive topics that should be addressed by parents at home and not by schools."

During an interview with Siouxland News' Katie Copple, Governor Ricketts described the guidelines as not "age-appropriate" and accused the board of education of allowing "political activist groups" to play a prominent role in the development of the guidelines.

"One of the things that they are talking about, is they talk about in kindergarten, talk about consent," he told Copple. "Now, certainly talking about inappropriate touching is one thing, but kindergarteners can't give consent. You can't do that in Nebraska until you reach your late teens. So this is something that is completely inappropriate."

One group called upon to contribute to the proposed standards is Out Nebraska, a nonprofit LGBTQ group, NET reports. "And in fact, this group didn't even consult with the chief medical officer of the state of Nebraska or the public health board of the state of Nebraska," said Ricketts.

Ricketts also raised concerns that the guidelines ignore traditional family households in lieu of teaching impressionable young children about alternative lifestyles. "Another thing they talk about is different family structures, but they don't talk about heterosexual family structures, which is the one I grew up in," he told Copple.

The standards encourage educators to teach about single-parent, blended, intergenerational, cohabitating, adoptive, foster, same-gender, and interracial households. They do not even reference a heterosexual, two-parent household.

And as if the age-inappropriate sexual content of the guidelines was not troublesome enough, it also ventures into controversial social-justice territory.

Students in grade eight will be taught to "learn and discuss cultural issues that impact mental, emotional, and social health," which will include an exploration of "how some laws and policies are viewed as tools of systemic racism."

Governor Ricketts is encouraging parents in the state to reach out directly to the board of education to voice their concerns and oppose the curriculum framework. "I encourage parents to go to the state board of education website, read the standards and contact the state board of education and give them your feedback," he said. "That is what really needs to be happening. Parents need to give their feedback directly to the state board of education."

A final draft of the health standards will be considered for acceptance by the Nebraska State Board of Education in the fall of 2021, the Nebraska Catholic Conference reports.

Subscribe to the New American

Get exclusive digital access to the most informative, non-partisan truthful news source for patriotic Americans!

Discover a refreshing blend of time-honored values, principles and insightful perspectives within the pages of "The New American" magazine. Delve into a world where tradition is the foundation, and exploration knows no bounds.

From politics and finance to foreign affairs, environment, culture, and technology, we bring you an unparalleled array of topics that matter most.

Subscribe

What's Included?

- 24 Issues Per Year
- Optional Print Edition
- Digital Edition Access
- Exclusive Subscriber Content
- Audio provided for all articles
- Unlimited access to past issues
- Coming Soon! Ad FREE
- 60-Day money back guarantee!
- Cancel anytime.