Election Interference Scandal: Top Meta, MSNBC, Google People Confess They're Working for Harris, Democrats

In yet another successful undercover video sting, O'Keefe Media Group (OMG) has uncovered blatant election interference by Facebook and Instagram.

The social media behemoths, owned by Meta, are "automatically" downgrading posts critical of Vice President Kamala Harris. As well, OMG reported, billionaire Meta tycoon Mark Zuckerberg is "100 percent" behind the operation.

The goal: Elect Harris.

The latest report follows the revelation from an MSNBC producer that the hate-Trump network is working overtime to help Harris. A Google "growth strategist" confessed the same thing.

Meta

A Meta senior software engineer named Jeevan Gyawali confessed the election interference, and described how "civic classifiers," created by a very large "integrity team," ensure that "civic content" is "demoted."

"So they will see a dip in like impressions and engagement but they would not be, like, officially warned of the reason why," the OMG reporter said.

"Correct," Gyawali said.

The software engineer offered an example:

Say your uncle in Ohio said something, like, about Kamala Harris is unfit to be a president because she doesn't have a child. That kind of sh*t is automatically demoted.

When the journalist asked what would happen if "right-wing groups" posted anti-Harris information, Gyawali said that "that's all going to be demoted 100 percent."

As well, the "the person would not be notified."

And if that user posted "at least a couple of items" that violated the integrity team's civic classifiers, "they're also 'redlisted.'"

That's called shadow-banning, Gyawali confessed. When the reporter said the posts "will never be shown," the hate-Trump engineer nodded yes.

Gyawali said Meta could affect the forthcoming election in November, and that Mark Zuckerberg approves of the not-so-secret election interference.

“Is he gonna help the Democrats?” the OMG journalist asked.

Replied Gyawali, “Yeah.”

“So, he’s, like, going to help the Democrats right?” the journalist asked.

Gyawali: “100 percent.”

Meta also set up “SWAT teams” in April to control content and help Harris, the engineer confessed.

Amusingly, Gyawali met the undercover journalist on the Bumble dating app.

When OMG founder James O’Keefe contacted the hate-Trump engineer for a comment and told him “the girl works for me,” Gyawali shouted “Ah, fk” and ended the call.

MSNBC Helping Harris

Add MSNBC and Google to Meta. MSNBC Producer Basel Hamdan — also seduced by the prospect of new love — admitted that the far-left network is an arm of the Harris campaign.

Asked what the network had done to help the campaign, Hamdan said “amplify her message. What her message of the day is, is their message of the day.”

As well, he admitted that the network is, in its essence, a subsidiary of the Democratic Party.

“They’re often saying the same exact things,” he said. “It hammers home the point I am making,” he said, “that this news network is indistinguishable from the party.”

“Are they just the Democratic Party’s mouthpiece?” the OMG journalist asked.

Replied Hamdan: “Exactly.”

“MSNBC is the Democratic Party’s mouthpiece,” the journalist confirmed.

“Yes,” Hamdan replied.

Hamdan confessed that the network was doing whatever it could to elect Harris. But what he admitted was “bad journalism” had “unfortunately ... made their viewers dumber over the years.”

That helps former President Donald Trump, he said.

“They’ve really narrowed their audience’s mind to the point where even when guests go on their show to criticize Democrats, people get mad at the guests,” the hate-Trump producer confessed.

Google

Google growth strategist and ad salesman Dakota Leazer spilled the beans during yet another undercover sting.

That video was broadcast the day after Axios reported that the Harris campaign was editing Google headlines.

But Leazer revealed that Google was part of a Big Tech conspiracy to help Harris.

Said Leazer:

“Google was essentially promoting through its ads ... like rhetoric that was very, like, pro Kamala and, like, it seemed to link out to, like, legitimate, like, news publication sites so it, like, seemed, like, it was an ad from PBS ... but it was really an ad for the Kamala campaign. ...

And it’s a ... coordinated effort by, like, big Tech, like, big companies to, like, try and get her to win.

And, “yeah,” he said, “it’s definitely coordinated.”

Similar to Facebook, he said, Google is “reorienting the search engine such that Kamala is more, you know, favored.”

As well, he continued, “a lot of the AI stuff that’s sort of proliferating right now is doing so in a way that’s, like, generally favorable to her.”

Yet, Leazer confessed, the “progressive” company is interested in money, not politics:

Google’s a very liberal Progressive company if they have a belief that one side will allow them to make more money — I don’t think it’s, like, at the very very top, I don’t think it’s political. I think it’s, like, economic, I think it’s all about, like, the share or the stock price.

Leazer fled when O’Keefe confronted him.

So far, neither the Harris campaign nor the Democratic Party have complained about the election interference.

On another note, it appears that some men who work in leftist social or mainstream media are looking for love in all the wrong places.
