Tom Harris: “Making it Safe” for Liberals to be Climate Realists (Video)

Tom Harris (shown), is a happy warrior, an ebullient David taking on the Goliath global warming industry. Ever upbeat and always well informed, he is an effective (and likeable) debater and an articulate spokesman for the growing camp of scientist skeptics (or realists, as some prefer) who are challenging the increasingly discredited dogma of climate alarmism.

As executive director of the International Climate Science Coalition (climatescienceinternational.org) based in Ottawa, Canada, Mr. Harris is the organization’s public face and frequent media presenter. One of his most recent media forays is an opinion piece on the EPA’s new power plant regulations that appeared in the New York Post on August 10 entitled, “How the EPA ignores the public and science.”

The International Climate Science Coalition (ICSC) has established itself as one of the important “go to” sources on climate issues and boasts an impressive advisory board of noteworthy scientists, including:

The New American interviewed Mr. Harris (see the video embedded below) in Las Vegas at the Heartland Institute's Ninth International Conference on Climate Change, where he was honored (see video here) as the winner of the Excellence in Climate Science Communication Award.

As he explained to The New American, Harris sees a big part of his job as helping dismantle the logjam of ideological "trench warfare" that has much of the scientific community divided into "Left" and "Right" camps. ICSC has contact with many scientists (including many who are socialists or liberal-Left, he says) who are privately skeptical of the IPCC and climate alarmism, but are afraid to come out publicly for fear of being labeled a "right-wing denier," as well as also suffering retribution in their academic or government institution.
