

U.S. Not Performing Background Checks on Refugees

ISIS has been reported capable of printing their own Syrian passports by the Department of Homeland Security.

In addition to this report, an anonymous source from the Department of Defense reports to The New American that the United States is not performing background checks on refugees which are being brought into the country.

Immigration expert Andy Ramirez also examines the refugee admission numbers that the White House released in a memorandum, and how the administration is not following its own standard which they set back in September.
