Government Releasing Sick Illegals in American Communities

The illegal-alien invasion of the United States continues with no end in sight, and Border Patrol agents, whose agency does not have the means to house the “migrants,” are dumping them into unsuspecting communities.

But the communities don’t have the means to handle them either, which is why Yuma, Arizona, declared an emergency two weeks ago.

What Americans in these communities also don’t know but might suspect is this: The waves of immigration are bringing in thousands of sick and diseased people who might well trigger a major contagion.

They Want To Get Caught

That news comes from Aaron Hull, chief of the El Paso Border Sector. He divulged the truth in an interview with Maria Bartiromo of CNBC, helpfully posted online by CNS.com. Upwards of 90 percent of the illegals hitting the border’s El Paso sector are from the Northern Triangle countries: Guatemala, Honduras, and El Salvador.

Hull confirmed what Brian Hastings, operations chief at Customs and Border Protection, said in early March. But unlike illegals in the past who wanted to avoid the Border Patrol, these “migrants” want and expect to be caught because they know border agents will release them.

“Those people realize that as long as they’re being apprehended by us, they are still likely to be released on their own recognizance,” Hull told Bartiromo. “That’s because the country, the U.S. government as a whole, does not have the detention and removal capability to hold them in custody until their immigration hearing.”

When Bartiromo said “they want to get apprehended,” Hull agreed. “Yeah, they’re not trying to get away. They know that we’re basically — a period of time, they are going to be held in custody and then they’re going to be released and continue on to all parts of the United States.”

And Bartiromo confirmed again what The New American has repeatedly reported: Aliens don’t fear returning home and aren’t crossing the border for “asylum.” Bartiromo said she directly asked a woman why she was in the United States.

“Asylum, asylum,” she answered. But when Bartiromo asked the illegal alien whether anyone tried to hurt her, she confessed the truth: “Well actually, I just want to get opportunity for my daughter.”

“That’s exactly right,” Hull replied. “A lot of people refer to all of these family units as asylum seekers but that’s really not the case. Matter of fact, most of those that we encounter when they’re caught at this step in the process, they don’t indicate fear of return. They indicate they want better opportunity.”

TB and Scabies

The real shocker is this: Hull's frank admission that the federal government is inoculating American communities with illegals who carry contagious, deadly diseases.

"Agents join the Patrol to secure the border, to enforce the law," he said, "but increasingly they're being tasked with things that they never thought they would be doing — heating up baby bottles, literally changing diapers, caring for more and more sick people, because a lot of these aliens coming in are carrying contagious health conditions, things like chicken pox, scabies, tuberculosis, lice."

Lice carry the threat of a typhus contagion, while scabies is an infestation of the skin with the human itch mite. According to the Centers for Disease Control, scabies spreads "rapidly under crowded conditions where close body contact is frequent. Institutions such as nursing homes, extended-care facilities, and prisons are often sites of scabies outbreaks." Illegals also bring in Chagas disease.

Other diseases the illegals bring in include mumps, strep throat, and the flu, which killed an illegal-alien boy after his irresponsible father refused treatment.

In other words, the "migrants" are sick — very sick — but CBP isn't holding them in quarantine. It's releasing them. The Trump administration, as the Associated Press reported in April, has expanded the catch-and-release policy the president vowed to stop.

At the end of March, Breitbart.com reported that the government had dumped 108,500 illegals into communities across the southwest, and some 24,000 between March 5 and March 20 alone. The targets of this dump were San Diego (2,500), Phoenix (4,000), El Paso (7,500), and San Antonio (10,000). Of the 108,500, Breitbart reported, "50,000 ... were released in the San Antonio area since the beginning of the year."

Those facts and Hull's admission add up to a frightening truth: The United States government is waging biological warfare on Americans by dumping these sick and diseased illegals into their communities.
