

Obama Expands U.S. Military Role in Latin America, Again

Under the guise of fighting a more vigorous “war on drugs,” the Obama administration will continue adding to the exploding government deficit by expanding the already widespread and extremely costly U.S. military presence throughout Latin America. Critics in the United States and all across the Western hemisphere, however, have slammed the controversial scheme’s growth from all angles.

According to an investigative report published February 3 by the Associated Press, the federal government’s controversial “war” in Latin America is ballooning at unprecedented rates. Consider, for example, the record $3 billion in military equipment transfers to governments in the region authorized by Obama in 2011 — a quadrupling of the figures from just a decade ago. Almost 90 percent of the nearly $1 billion in aid for military and law enforcement in Latin America was spent on the “drug war,” the AP reported.

Several thousand U.S. troops are deployed in the region at any given time, and as The New American reported last year, Obama just sent hundreds of Marines to Guatemala to fight the “drug war” after the anti-communist president there called for total legalization. According to the AP, U.S. government pilots flying drug missions for at least 10 separate federal law-enforcement agencies clocked almost 50,000 hours on drug missions in Latin America.

Meanwhile, American troops are training dubious military forces all over the region — all over the world, actually — to help wage the controversial war. The U.S. government also uses its own resources, such as satellites and “intelligence” capabilities, to help questionable Latin American regimes crack down on certain drug cartels even as others receive official assistance in the form of protection and arms.

If Obama gets his way, despite federal deficits topping $1 trillion annually and Latin American leaders increasingly calling for new strategies such as legalization, the expensive “drug war” militarization trend is expected to continue exploding. Congress, meanwhile, aside from the occasional mild criticism from members on either side of the aisle, seems more than willing to go along with the president’s controversial plans.

Unsurprisingly, drug warriors and others whose taxpayer-funded jobs depend on the continual expansion of the U.S. government’s United Nations-mandated “war” celebrated Obama’s surge in spending. Critics in America and throughout the hemisphere, however, blasted the scheme, warning about the deadly consequences paid by innocent victims, the arming of hostile regimes notorious for human rights abuses, the staggering cost that American taxpayers can no longer afford, and much more.

Among the most serious complaints expressed by opponents of Obama’s increasingly massive and militarized war are the well-documented suspicions of U.S. government intimate involvement in the drug trade. Top American officials, not to mention leaders from all over Latin America and even drug cartel bosses, have alleged that the Central Intelligence Agency and other U.S. government entities are

Written by Alex Newman on February 12, 2013

deeply tied to the narcotics trade.

The New American has documented these ties repeatedly in recent years — everyone from former Drug Enforcement Administration chiefs and U.S. lawmakers to Latin American presidents and top drug cartel bosses have accused Washington, D.C., of complicity in the narcotics trade. The recent “Fast and Furious” scandal, which exposed the Obama administration lawlessly arming certain Mexican drug cartels, has only added fuel to the fire. The New York Times even exposed the DEA laundering tens of billions of dollars in drug profits, but when Congress tried to investigate, the administration stonewalled.

Other critics point to the fact that the federal government is not authorized by the Constitution to wage a drug war in the first place, even domestically, let alone all over the world. The U.S. government, of course, has a few constitutionally enumerated powers granted to it by the states and the people that created it. Outside of those specifically delegated authorities, as the Tenth Amendment and the Founding Fathers’ writings make clear, the federal government has no lawful power to act — that is why alcohol prohibition, for instance, required a constitutional amendment.

Then there is the giant problem that much of the unconstitutional drug war “aid” goes to corrupt regimes — governments ruled by criminals who are often hostile to the United States. Indeed, some two thirds of Latin American governments are now controlled by a coalition of socialist and communist forces known as the Foro de São Paulo (São Paulo Forum, or FSP), which was founded by Cuban despot Fidel Castro, former Brazilian President Luiz Inacio “Lula” da Silva, the Sandinistas, and even some Marxist narco-terrorist groups.

Communist Cuba’s Raul Castro just assumed the presidency of the “Community of Latin American and Caribbean States” (CELAC), a Communist Chinese-backed transnational entity that includes every national government and dictatorship in the hemisphere except the United States and Canada. Establishment publications such as the Economist heralded Castro as the new “leader” of Latin America. It is also well known that the FSP and its members have received significant financial support from groups such as the FARC, a Marxist terror group that reaps huge profits from cocaine thanks to prohibition.

Still, tens of billions of U.S. taxpayer dollars have already been spent on drug efforts in Latin America over the last decade — arming and training various dubious regimes in the region, spraying poison on farmers’ fields, sending out-of-control federal agents throughout the region, and more — often with tragic results. The flow of illegal drugs across the intentionally porous U.S. border and the body count of innocent victims, however, have only continued to grow in tandem.

Rep. Eliot Engel (D-N.Y.), who chaired the U.S. House Western Hemisphere Subcommittee throughout Obama’s first term in office, told the AP that the U.S. government-sponsored “crackdown” on certain Mexican cartels only left them “stronger and more violent.” Mexicans, of course, know those facts all too well — especially considering the well over 70,000 civilians who have been killed over the last five years amid Obama’s ramped-up “war” in that nation.

“Billions upon billions of U.S. taxpayer dollars have been spent over the years to combat the drug trade in Latin America and the Caribbean,” Rep. Eliot Engel explained, adding that he planned to introduce a proposal to create a “Western Hemisphere Drug Policy Commission” to review the controversial schemes. “In spite of our efforts, the positive results are few and far between.”

Obama administration officials cited by the AP, however, defended the strategy and vowed to expand it.

Written by Alex Newman on February 12, 2013

“It is unfortunate that militaries have to be involved in what are essentially law enforcement engagements,” noted outgoing Deputy Assistant Secretary of Defense for Western Hemisphere Affairs Frank Mora. “We are not going to turn our backs on these governments or these institutions because they’ve found themselves in such a situation that they have to use their militaries in this way.”

Despite the fact that the U.S. government is no closer to “winning” its UN-mandated unconstitutional “war” on drugs than it was when the scheme began about a trillion dollars ago, the AP noted that there are no plans to reconsider the failed strategy. In fact, it will only expand, officials explained, with American taxpayers apparently expected to believe that more of the same will somehow bring about different results.

“It’s not for me to say if it’s the correct strategy. It’s the strategy we are using,” said the Defense Department’s Latin America narcotics boss Brick Scoggins, adding that the U.S. government’s expensive war is expected to keep growing in the region over the next five years — especially in Central America. “I don’t know what the alternative is.”

Numerous Latin American leaders from across the political spectrum have suggested full legalization as an alternative in recent years, saying it would put the cartels out of business and end the horrific violence associated with prohibition. Obama, though, promptly dispatched high-level functionaries throughout the region to put an end to those discussions using threats and taxpayer-funded bribes.

Critics say another alternative might be to simply follow the U.S. Constitution, which all officials, from Obama on down, took an oath to uphold and defend. That would mean an end to the federal drug war, however, as well as an end to the gravy train of taxpayer money that drug warriors, foreign regimes, and government “contractors” have come to rely upon.

So, at least until Uncle Sam’s creditors decide to finally stop loaning money to Obama, analysts expect that the administration’s global drug war will almost certainly keep expanding. The price, meanwhile, aside from the costs shouldered by American taxpayers, will continue to be paid largely in the blood of innocent Latin Americans.

Photo of sailor aboard USS Underwood patrolling of the coast of Panama as part of the war on drugs: AP Images

Alex Newman, a foreign correspondent for The New American, grew up in Latin America and is currently based in Europe. He can be reached at anewman@thenewamerican.com.

Related articles:

CIA “Manages” Drug Trade, Mexican Official Says

Critics Slam Obama Deployment of U.S. Troops to Guatemala for Drug War

Obama Demands More War-making Powers from Congress

Stratfor Sources: U.S. Troops in Mexico as Feds Aid Cartels

UN Demands Obama Smash State Marijuana Legalization

War on Drugs Grows FAST Abroad

Reports: CIA Working with Mexican Drug Cartels

Calderon: U.S. Officials Involved in Drug Trade

Mexican Drug Trafficker Says He Worked With Feds

Written by Alex Newman on February 12, 2013

Trafficker: U.S. Feds Aided Mexican Drug Cartel

“Drug Lords” Targeted in Fast & Furious Worked for FBI

Congress Probes DEA Drug Money Laundering Scheme

Outrage Grows After U.S. Drug War Kills More Honduran Women, Children

Obama Backs Mexico’s Failed ‘War on Drugs’

The Other Unconstitutional War

Feds Purposely Keeping U.S. Borders Wide Open, Experts Say

Latin America Debates Drug Legalization; Obama Demands More War on Drugs

Despite Mounting Regional Pressure, Obama Vows More Drug War

Subscribe to the New American

Get exclusive digital access to the most informative, non-partisan truthful news source for patriotic Americans!

Discover a refreshing blend of time-honored values, principles and insightful perspectives within the pages of "The New American" magazine. Delve into a world where tradition is the foundation, and exploration knows no bounds.

From politics and finance to foreign affairs, environment, culture, and technology, we bring you an unparalleled array of topics that matter most.

What's Included?

- 24 Issues Per Year
- Optional Print Edition
- Digital Edition Access
- Exclusive Subscriber Content
- Audio provided for all articles
- Unlimited access to past issues
- Coming Soon! Ad FREE
- 60-Day money back guarantee!
- Cancel anytime.

Subscribe