

Written by Michael Tennant on April 21, 2011

Obama Sends $25 Million in “Nonlethal” Aid to Libyan Rebels

As if it weren't enough that the Obama administration is spending hundreds of millions of taxpayer dollars on an unconstitutional war on Libya, the administration took the occasion of every taxpayer's favorite day of the year, April 15, to announce that it is going to send $25 million worth of “nonlethal” aid to the rebels fighting against the regime of Col. Moammar Gadhafi.

The Washington Times has obtained a copy of a letter from Joseph E. Macmanus, Acting Assistant Secretary of State for Legislative Affairs, to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee, in which Macmanus described to Congress the administration's plans to provide the aid. “The president's proposed actions would provide urgently needed nonlethal assistance to support efforts to protect civilians and civilian-populated areas under threat of attack in Libya,” Macmanus wrote. He explained that Obama had authorized “any U.S. government agency to provide assistance to support efforts by Libyan groups ... to protect civilians and civilian-populated areas under threat of attack in Libya.”

The administration, it should be noted, did not seek permission from Congress to spend taxpayers' money in this fashion; it merely notified legislators that it intends to do so. The obvious assumption is that the President may tap the Treasury for $25 million for whatever foreign misadventures he so chooses. If Congress has indeed given the executive branch a slush fund for foreign intervention, then shame on Congress. If it has not, then the illegality of the war has now been compounded by this expenditure, increasing the urgency of ending the intervention and impeaching the President. As attorney Bruce Fein, who has drafted an article of impeachment because of the war, asked rhetorically, “If [Obama] can wipe out the war powers authorization, why can't he wipe out Congress's authority to spend?” He may well be doing just that with this latest announcement.

Even if the expenditure were legal, however, it would still be ill-advised. Trying to determine who the “good guys” are in a foreign war is rarely as simple as it is in the movies, and the U.S. government's record of picking allies is not encouraging. This is the same government, after all, that chose to back the Afghan Mujahadeen, some of whom later became al-Qaeda, and the Kosovo Liberation Army, another Islamic terrorist organization. With al-Qaeda fighters known to be among the Libyan rebels, the United States could once again be aiding its own enemies.

Written by Michael Tennant on April 21, 2011

Naturally, the Obama administration took great pains to assure Congress that it was doing no such thing, telling the Senate committee that the Transitional National Council, the rebels' political wing, "has publicly rejected terrorism, embraced the Geneva Conventions, and emphasized its dedication to building democratic institutions to provide for a secular future in which a broad range of Libyan citizens will be able to participate." This is, of course, the same administration that just a few weeks ago professed ignorance of the rebels' possible terrorist affiliations. Now, however, it is certain that the TNC is a fine, upstanding bunch of citizens with only the best interests of their fellow Libyans at heart (as evidenced, perhaps, by the fact that they have already established an oil company and that time-tested tool of tyranny, a central bank).

The administration also made it clear that the aid to the rebels would be nonlethal in nature, encompassing "vehicles, fuel trucks and fuel bladders, ambulances, medical equipment, protective vests, binoculars, and non-secure radios," according to a memorandum accompanying the letter to the committee. But as a concerned Senate aide, speaking on condition of anonymity, told the Times: "The justification in the letter appears to claim the TNC is stable, democratic and adhering to the Geneva Conventions. If all of this is true, then why can't you provide lethal military assistance as well?"

Indeed, such "mission creep" is a serious concern. What began as a supposedly limited, short-term mission to protect Libyan civilians has become a much larger and longer-lasting engagement, with U.S. aircraft continuing to fly bombing missions over the country and Europe almost daily widening its involvement. Now the President is proposing to expand the mission further by providing direct, albeit nonlethal, assistance to rebels who may very well include avowed enemies of the United States and who, in any case, are hardly a known quantity. If that fails to topple Gadhafi — something Obama has said must happen even while insisting that regime change is not U.S. policy — can lethal assistance be far behind? After that, will "boots on the ground" follow, as suggested by the head of the U.S. African Command?

The way things are going, Libya could turn out to be Obama's Iraq. For the sake of our country, Congress (now) or the voters (next year) need to save the President from himself.

Photo: President Barack Obama makes a statement on Libya, March 18, 2011, in the East Room of the White House in Washington: AP Images

Related articles:

In Libya, as in Iraq, "End of Combat" Means More Combat

General Says Boots on the Ground May Be Needed in Libya

A Fein Time for Impeachment

Bill to End Obama's Libya's War Attracts Bipartisan Support

Clinton: Obama Will Ignore Congress on Libya War

Libya: The \$600 Million War

UN, Obama Fighting Alongside Al-Qaeda in Libya

Obama, Clinton, and Biden Agree: War on Libya Is Unconstitutional

UN Trumps Constitution, Congress in President's Undeclared War on Libya

Written by Michael Tennant on April 21, 2011

A Real Cost/Benefit Analysis of Libyan Intervention

Libya: One Quagmire Too Far?

On Libya, It's the Beltway Interventionists vs. Ron Paul and the Founders

Subscribe to the New American

Get exclusive digital access to the most informative, non-partisan truthful news source for patriotic Americans!

Discover a refreshing blend of time-honored values, principles and insightful perspectives within the pages of "The New American" magazine. Delve into a world where tradition is the foundation, and exploration knows no bounds.

From politics and finance to foreign affairs, environment, culture, and technology, we bring you an unparalleled array of topics that matter most.

What's Included?

- 24 Issues Per Year
- Optional Print Edition
- Digital Edition Access
- Exclusive Subscriber Content
- Audio provided for all articles
- Unlimited access to past issues
- Coming Soon! Ad FREE
- 60-Day money back guarantee!
- Cancel anytime.

Subscribe