RINO Liz Cheney to Support Democrats

Liz Cheney, whom Wyoming Republicans obliterated in the party's primary in August, claimed a year ago that she would do "whatever it takes" to keep Donald Trump out of the White House for a second term.

She repeated her promise on Saturday while speaking at the Texas Tribune Festival. She told the news outlet's CEO Evan Smith, "I will certainly do whatever it takes to make sure Donald Trump isn't anywhere close to the Oval Office."

She included Republican Kari Lake in that promise: "I am going to do everything I can to make sure that Kari Lake is not elected." Lake, a Republican who is supported by Trump and believes the 2020 election was stolen from him, is presently tied in the polls with her Democratic opponent, Katie Hobbs, in the race for governor of Arizona.

Cheney added that, in her deranged hatred of anything Trump, she would even campaign for Democrats if they were running against a pro-Trump Republican.

She continues to use her position on the faux January 6 "insurrection" investigating committee to keep her name in the spotlight. She said that the committee has just received 800,000 pages of correspondence from the Secret Service in response to a subpoena and that they contain "a lot" of new information.

As for making a criminal referral to the Justice Department, she continues to bide her time, likely waiting to spring her "revelations" as part of the expected "October surprise" designed to sully and damage Trump and his endorsed candidates just before the November midterm elections.

Lake expressed delight when she learned that Cheney was coming after her:

That might be the biggest, best gift I have ever received! The Republican Party — the new Republican Party — is the party of We, the People. It is no longer the party of warmongers.

Christian Ziegler, vice chairman of the Florida GOP, said Cheney's promise to campaign against her own party "should mobilize a lot of our voters to the polls," while Steve Bannon, a former Trump advisor, wrote, "This almost certainly guarantees a Kari Lake blowout." He then added, tongue in cheek, that "Katie Hobbs [her Democratic opponent] should file an immediate protest!"
