Rubio Fires Almost Entire USAID Workforce; Bureaucrats Sue as Steube, Massie File Bill to Abolish Rogue Agency

President Donald Trump's war against waste, fraud, and abuse at the U.S. Agency for International Development (USAID) has continued with the dismissal of some 4,700 employees, leaving a staff of just under 300.

Federal bureaucrats have retaliated with the usual far-left lawsuit that claims what Trump has done — gut the agency, fire the employees, and stop foreign aid for 90 days — is illegal.

As well, GOP U.S. Representatives Greg Steube of Florida and Thomas Massie of Kentucky have introduced legislation to abolish the rogue agency, which has spent billions of taxpayer dollars on wasteful projects abroad, not least its subsidies to sex perverts and more than 6,000 journalists and sex perverts.

You're Fired

Doing what should have been long ago, the acting administrator of USAID, Secretary of State Marco Rubio, has cashiered almost every employee, NBC reported.

The agency "is expected to be reduced to about 290 workers from the more than 5,000 foreign service officers, civil servants and personal service contractors it currently employs, according to two sources familiar with the plans," the network reported:

Most of the approximately 3,000 institutional support contractors have already been fired or furloughed. The status of the approximately 5,000 foreign service nationals serving around the world is not yet clear.

Speaking to Fox News, Rubio explained what had to be done.

Noting that the agency is required "to take policy direction" from the president, secretary of state, and National Security Council, it has "evolved into an agency that believes they're not even a U.S. government agency." Instead, its personnel believe the agency is a "global charity." The agency spends tax money as it sees fit, he said, "whether it is in national interest or not."

Uncooperative Agency

Rubio said diplomats the world over say the agency is uncooperative and will "undermine the work that we're doing in that country" and "supporting programs that upset the host government."

That includes supporting sexual perversion, but in any event, Rubio continued, agency employees “just don’t consider that they work for the US. They just think they’re a global entity and that their Master is the globe and not the United States.”

“That’s not what the statute says,” Rubio explained. “And that’s not sustainable.”

The State Department is waiving the cessation of certain foreign aid, for instance, by helping Panama deport illegal aliens. But USAID, with $40 billion of foreign aid money, is “completely uncooperative,” he said:

They won’t tell you what the programs are. They refuse to answer questions. They try to push through payments even after the executive order. They were still trying to push money through the system.... The goal was to reform it, but now we have rank insubordination. Now we have basically an active effort that where their basic attitude is we don’t work for anyone. We work for ourselves. No agency of government can tell us what to do....

They’re completely uncooperative. So we had no choice but to take dramatic steps to bring this thing under control....

They are insubordinate. They refuse to provide access, they refuse to provide information.

Rubio said the agency even stonewalls Congress, claiming that the entitled bureaucrats tell congressmen and senators,

We’re not going to tell you anything. We don’t work for you. We don’t work for State. We don’t work for the president. We don’t even work for America. We work for ourselves. That’s not going to continue.

Rubio emphasized that foreign aid must serve American interests, and that the federal government is not a global charity as USAID personnel think.

Lawsuit and Legislation

That, of course, is why the American Foreign Service Association and American Federation of Government Employees, a highly organized cabal of grifting bureaucrats, has sued Trump, Rubio, State, and USAID.

The lawsuit alleges that Trump violated the separation of powers provision in the federal Constitution because USAID, first created by executive order, was recreated as a free-standing agency by Congress in a law signed by President Bill Clinton in 1998.

The renegades also argue that Trump violated the “take care” clause of the Constitution, which required that the president “take care that the Laws be faithfully executed.”

Last, they argue that Trump’s overhaul “is arbitrary and capricious” and violated the Administrative Procedure Act, which governs how federal agencies make rules and regulations.

Yet what Rubio described, along with the recently uncovered waste, fraud, and abuse, is why Massie and Steube introduced the law to abolish USAID.

“For too long, USAID has funneled billions of American tax dollars into bloated, inefficient foreign aid programs that are riddled with waste, corruption and ideological bias,” Steube said:

Instead of benefitting American taxpayers who fund these programs, USAID’s initiatives often push progressive social agendas that are out of touch with the values and interests of our nation. Worse yet, these dollars frequently end up in the hands of bad actors who do not have America’s interests in mind and misuse the funds for purposes far removed from their original intent.

“It’s time,” he said, “to put America first” and stop sending money to an “unaccountable bureaucracy.”

Funding “Journalism”

Steube introduced the bill as more examples of waste, fraud, and abuse surface — most notably the agency’s funding journalists across the globe.

“Trump’s foreign aid freeze throws journalism around the world into chaos,” Reporters Without Borders claimed.

“According to a USAID fact sheet which has since been taken offline,” RWB reported, “in 2023, the agency funded training and support for 6,200 journalists, assisted 707 non-state news outlets, and supported 279 media-sector civil society organizations dedicated to strengthening independent media. The 2025 foreign aid budget included $268,376,000 allocated by Congress to support “independent media and the free flow of information.”

Another report revealed that the federal government — meaning American taxpayers — is the “largest public donor to independent media development globally.”

As the Big Grift goes, the End Wokeness X feed reported that USAID threw away $159 million to build “climate resistant schools” in Pakistan, while a Substack writer revealed that the agency sent $310 million to Hamas to build a cement factory, which the terror outfit used to build tunnels used in its attack on Israel on October 7, 2023.
