Top Doc for Obama, Trump Says Biden Lacks Cognitive Ability to Be President

Bizarre, slurred, and garbled ramblings pouring forth from the mouth of Joe Biden are so common and numerous that they have spawned a YouTube genre, with some videos garnering millions of views. His barely intelligible ramblings, erratic behavior, crazed facial expressions, unsteady gait, and loss of memory testify to his diminished mental capacity. And now, the former physician to both Presidents Obama and Trump is saying Biden is unfit to serve and should be removed from office.

Representative Ronny Jackson (R-Texas), who served as the White House top doc from July 25, 2013 to March 28, 2018 — straddling the last part of the Obama administration and the first part of the Trump administration — predicts that Biden cannot and will not finish out his term as president, due to his declining mental condition. On July 22, after umpteen examples of Biden demonstrating his diminished capacity that stretch back back to the campaign trail — Jackson tweeted his reaction to Biden's embarrassing performance at a poorly-attended recent Town Hall. On that occasion, Biden went off script on a weird rant about "a man on the moon" and "aliens" in response to a question about COVID vaccinations.

In his tweet, Jackson said, "Something's SERIOUSLY wrong with Biden - and it's only going to get WORSE! It's past the point of embarrassment. He's lost. He's confused. He can barely put a coherent sentence together. He MUST have a cognitive exam and release the results!"

That tweet includes a video of Jackson appearing on Fox News with Sean Hannity alongside Stephen Miller, former senior advisor to President Trump. In that video, Jackson was asked if — in his medical opinion, based on what he has seen from Biden's actions in multiple videos — Biden would do well on a cognitive test. He replied that he does not believe Biden could pass such a test. "I've been saying this from the very beginning," Jackson said, adding, "I've been saying that something's going on — I was saying this when he was candidate Joe Biden. And I've been saying that it's only going to get worse, and guess what? We're watching that happen right before our eyes right now."

Jackson went on to say, "And I'm at the point right now where, you know, I went from, you know, telling people, 'We should be concerned about what might potentially be going on,' to now saying, 'Hey, what is happening right now?'" Given the state of Biden's obvious cognitive decline, Jackson asked, "Where are the people in our academic medicine that were out there calling for President Trump to have a cognitive test? Where are these people?"

Jackson's reference to people calling for Trump to have a cognitive test performed is relevant for two reasons. First, because partisanism should play no part in determining whether a president whose lack of mental faculties is on display is fit to perform his duties. Secondly, because Trump — while incessantly being called out for statements he made and ideas he held that were outside the approved thinking in the establishment — did take the test. And as Hannity says in the video, Trump scored a 30 out of 30.

But even back then, Biden refused to take the test, instead ridiculing a black reported who asked him about it. Errol Barnett from CBS News asked the question and Biden replied, "No I haven't taken a test. Why the hell would I take a test? C'mon man! That's like saying to before you got on this program 'Did you take a test where you're taking cocaine or not, huh?' Are you a junkie?" Biden then spends the next minute trying to pretend nothing is wrong with his mind, even as he struggles to get the words out. "I am very willing to let the American public judge my physical mental phil — my physical as well as my mental philt — fitness and to make judgment about who I am," he said with such difficulty that he had to squint his eyes shut under the strain.

Such incidents are far from isolated. No one who has seen it will ever forget the video of Biden having a brain glitch that led him to diverge from a campaign speech to discuss his hairy legs, kids rubbing his hairy legs, roaches, and kids jumping on his lap. Well, that is unless they suffer from the same level of dementia as the man who currently carries the nuclear football.

Who could deny Biden's dementia while trying to explain his confusion on Election Day when he introduced his granddaughter as his dead son, Beau, before again getting confused and introducing her as his other granddaughter?

And lest it seem that the long hours and pressure of the campaign trail were to blame (as if being president isn't at least equally as stressful), his decline has only continued since taking office seven months ago. As president, Biden has forgotten the name of the secretary of defense and the Pentagon, managed to fall up the stairs to Airforce One, called Harris "President Harris" (in a redo of when he referred to her as "President-elect Harris" after the election), confused Syria with Libia at the G7 summit, just to name a few times.

More recently, he needed to consult a pocket note to answer a question about which he had literally just been briefed. During that embarrassing episode, he was also driven to near-total mental shutdown by the fact that while fumbling with the question, he was paying for a purchase at a fruit stand.

And the episode that led Jackson to tweet about Biden needing to have a cognitive test administered was Biden's recent CNN Town Hall when he went on disjointed rants, interrupted himself, and jabbered about a "man on the moon" and "aliens" and directly claimed — contrary to established cases — that no one who is vaccinated can get COVID.

In response to a question about COVID vaccines, Biden asked the CNN host, "You - y-y-y-y-you got the vaccination?" The host answered that he had and Biden asked him, "Are y-you, are you OK, I mean, you seem — no, it works or — we know — or, or, or, or, or the mom and dad or, or, or, or, or, or the neighbor or when you go to church or when you're — no, I, I, I, I really mean it. There are trusted interlocutors. Think of the people — if, if your kid wanted to find out whether or not there were — there's a man on the moon or w-whatever — y'know something — or, y'know whether those aliens are here or not, y'know, who are the people they talk to beyond the kids who love talking about it?"

About the efficacy of COVID vaccines, Biden said, "There - th - there, you're OK — You're not gonna - you're not gonna get COVID if you have these vaccinations." The CNN host — doing what liberal media folks do when dealing with Biden — simply agreed, saying, "Yeah." Someone should tell that to all of the people who have gotten COVID after getting vaccinated.

At one point in the hour-long Town Hall, Biden attempted to make a statement in the form of a question. This writer says "attempted" because Biden kept getting interrupted — by Biden. He said, "And the question is whether or not we should be in a position where you uh, um, uh are — why can't the — the — the experts say — we know that this virus is, in fact, uh, um, uh, is — is — i — i — is gonna be — uh, or excuse me — we — we — we — know why all the drugs approved are not temporarily approved, but permanently approved." Again, the CNN host just says, "Yeah."

Biden's condition is bad and worsening. And so, this writer would like to reiterate Jackson's question. Where are all the people who were calling for Trump to be tested and why are they not calling for Biden to do so? Could it be because they suspect he couldn't pass the test?

Jackson went on to say, "There's something seriously going on with this man right now. And I think that he's either going to resign — they're going to convince him to resign from office at some point in the near future for medical issues — or they're going to have to use the 25th amendment to get rid of this man."

Since Biden's mental issues predate his term in office, many have speculated since the campaign trail that the plan all along was to get Biden elected with Harris as his second and then pull the trigger on the 25th amendment. Whether or not that was the plan then, it is rapidly becoming apparent that it will likely be the only plan very soon.

Because Joe Biden is clearly demented. He needs our prayers; he should incite our pity; but he cannot serve as president of this nation.
