

Chris Zampogna: Defending the Thin Blue Line

Criminal law attorney Christopher
Zampogna says there is an alarming trend in prosecution of police officers. Operating in both Washington DC and New York, his law firm, Zampogna PC, has witnessed an increasing uptick since courts reopened after Covid lockdowns.

Zampogna is past president of the Bar Association of D.C. and now serves as a fellow of the American Bar Association, a position offered to only one percent of its members. He meets with The New American senior editor Rebecca Terrell to discuss his experience with the phenomenon and offer insights about what the future holds.
