It is bad enough that the long-suffering Cuban people must try to throw off the brutal tyranny of Cuba's murderous Communist dictatorship, but they are also having to fight off their Communist Chinese allies and even the squishy Biden administration, warned Cuba expert and historian Frank de Varona. In this interview on Conversations That Matter with The New American magazine's Alex Newman, de Varona, who invaded Cuba at the age of 17 to try to free his homeland, gives the inside scoop on what is happening on the island, as well as the geopolitical implications. In particular, he warned that the regime poses a major national-security threat to the United States.
