

GOP Goes “Green” While Elon Musk Embraces Carbon Tax. What will Trump Do?

A Republican group of lawmakers attended the United Nations COP29 “climate” summit in Baku, Azerbaijan. While many thought the crew would disarm climate negotiations in light of Trump’s mandate win, the GOP Congressman embraced “sustainable” energy and progressive climate policies, explained The New Americans’ senior editor Alex Newman on Behind The Deep State.

Meanwhile, Elon Musk, Trump’s close ally and a leader of the incoming Department of Government Efficiency (DOGE), is advocating for a “carbon tax.” What does this mean for Trump’s climate policy in his second term?
