Through pushing ESAs (education savings accounts), government vouchers for home educators, and other financial incentives under the banner of school choice, the government is seeking to control education while offering the illusion of freedom.

The state of Arizona is a prime example of this tactic being implemented, revealed senior editor for The New American magazine Alex Newman in this episode of Behind the Deep State. Under the leadership of Governor Hobbs, ESAs were pitched with strings attached, such as government oversight for any entity that accepted the funds, plus the enforcement of secular values.

The bottom line: to take the shackle of the state, you must bear the shackle. True educational freedom is fleeing the government's dictatorship over the education and upbringing of America's youth altogether.
