Florida Governor Ron DeSantis officially joined the presidential race yesterday, but his glitch-ridden announcement provided opposition fodder for GOP front-runner Donald Trump. Today, we compare DeSantis' solid record as governor with his less-impressive stint in Congress.

Also, Georgia Congresswoman Marjorie Taylor-Greene says the Treasury Department has documents showing that Hunter Biden's firm paid money to entities associated with prostitution and human sex trafficking; sane Americans are working to turn Target into the next Bud Light because of the retailer's LGBTQ children's apparel; and the L.A. Dodgers' association with an especially offensive group of cross-dressers may be too much even for Sin City residents.

In the second half of the show, investigative journalist William F. Jasper discusses the latest secretive Bilderberg meeting of globalists, and The John Birch Society's legislative team discusses the latest legislative news.
