

Epidemiologist: Science and Constitution Missing in COVID-19 Response

Associate Professor of Epidemiology Catherine M. Stein, PhD, discusses the coronavirus with Dr. Duke Pesta. She notes the failed projections and how the virus is less severe than thought. Dr. Stein also notes the large number of deaths wrongly recorded as caused by COVID-19. She says that science does not support mask-wearing and that infections are increasing in areas where masks are mandated. Dr. Stein argues that constitutionally, President Trump has done all he can to combat the virus and Joe Biden cannot legally do more. She says the states have gone too far restricting liberty. Dr. Stein also notes the hypocrisy in the liberal reactions between Trump rallies and rioters. She calls for individuals to make their own educated decisions instead of government mandates.
