ERIC: Election Fraud in Sheep's Clothing?

Kat Stansell is Grassroots Coordinator with the American Policy Center and is leading the charge in exposing what she calls one of the most nefarious election fraud organizations in the country. ERIC, which stands for Electronic Registration Information Center, is a membership organization for states that ostensibly helps them clean up their voter rolls. George Soros provided its seed money in 2012, funneled through the Pew Charitable Trust. Thirty-two states and the District of Columbia are ERIC members, which means that private organization has access to personal information about most residents past and present.

Louisiana recently withdrew its membership because of “questionable funding sources” and because “partisan actors may have access to ERIC network data for political purposes,” according to the secretary of state. Citizen activists made that victory a reality, and their cohorts in Wisconsin and Michigan are fighting back as well. Other states such as Pennsylvania are playing into the plot.
