Hungary's "Stop Soros Act" Limits Globalist's Influence

BUDAPEST — In this interview with The New American magazine's Alex Newman in Budapest, Hungarian Secretary of State for Public Diplomacy Zoltan Kovacs explains his government's "Stop Soros package." The legislation is meant to curb the outsized influence purchased by the controversial Hungary-born billionaire, who has poured billions into fundamentally changing societies against their will, Kovacs said. Nobody elected Soros, and yet he feels entitled to rule over people—that cannot be allowed.
