Iowa Farmers Face Loss of Their Property to United Nations' Agenda 2030-inspired Carbon Pipelines

Ted and Kimberly Junker have been farming in Iowa for more than 30 years. Now, a private company called Navigator CO2 wants to install a pipeline across Iowa, and they're planning to take property from farmers like the Junkers to do so.

The issue impacts not just these farmers, but every American who owns private property and who relies on the nation's agricultural products in their daily lives. The Junkers encourage everyone to post comments with the Iowa Utilities Board at <https://iub.iowa.gov/online-services/open-docket-comment-form> and to educate themselves about the agenda behind projects like this pipeline - a United Nations scheme called Agenda 2030.
