As America approaches its 250th anniversary of independence, powerful forces including Rockefellers and others are working on a comprehensive plan to fundamentally transform America and “Refound” it, explained researcher and writer Lisa Logan in this interview on Conversations That Matter with The New American magazine’s Alex Newman.

This refounding agenda involves a “color revolution” organized by many of the same individuals and organizations that conducted such operations in Eastern Europe and North Africa, Logan said.

However, if Americans are educated about this danger, it can be stopped, she said.
