Since being installed with help from the U.S. government and the propaganda media (especially the New York Times), the mass-murdering dictatorship enslaving Cuba has been exporting terrorism, communism, and subversion across the region and into the United States, explained historian, journalist, author, freedom fighter, and professor Frank de Varona in this interview on Conversations That Matter with The New American magazine's Alex Newman.

De Varona, who invaded Cuba during the Bay of Pigs attack before being betrayed by the U.S. government, warned that the regime remains a major danger to America today. In particular, he noted that it has acquired sophisticated drones with help from Russia and Iran that have the ability to hit nuclear power plants in Florida. And while the nation collapses with no energy, food, or medicine, it continues to spread evil.
