Right now, government schools are using AI and so-called “educational” apps to collect data on children. The scheme is even reaching into the realm of mental health, gathering data on children’s emotional behavior, explains Katie Allen, a policy advisor for Truth In Education, on this episode of The New American’s Conversations That Matter with Alex Newman. Massive profits are behind the data collection push, Allen added, revealing that the data is estimated to be worth eight trillion dollars.

Parents must understand that the government school system is not only intentionally dumbing down America’s youth and indoctrinating them to be sympathetic to communism and Satanism, but it is also manipulating children for profit. The only lasting solution is a mass exodus from government schools.
