Sen. Ron Johnson (R-Wis.) stands out among federal legislators for his commitment to investigating the Covid pandemic response, which inflicted heavy tolls on America in terms of lives lost, curtailed freedoms, and economic devastation. Since the pandemic's outset, Sen. Johnson has raised concerns about government policies, particularly economic shutdowns and the lack of exploration into early treatments. Engaging closely with renowned vaccine experts like Mike Yeadon, former Vice President of Pfizer, the senator became troubled by the disparities between official assertions of vaccine safety and efficacy and the actual evidence suggesting otherwise.

In the first episode of this two-part interview with The New American, Sen. Johnson delves into the influences shaping his stance on pandemic policies and discusses governmental corruption and the regulatory capture of healthcare agencies. Witnessing the suppression of proven medications such as hydroxychloroquine and ivermectin, alongside the risks associated with government-backed "treatments" like remdesivir and ventilators, the senator convened multiple hearings and called for governmental action, to no avail. He highlights the government's singular focus on vaccines as a solution, contextualizing it within bioweapon research and development funded by various agencies, including the Department of Defense, USAID, possibly under CIA influence, and factions within the National Institutes of Health (NIH) and the National Institute of Allergy and Infectious Diseases (NIAID), previously helmed by Drs. Francis Collins and Anthony Fauci, respectively. Despite mounting evidence of vaccine-related harm, healthcare agencies have largely disregarded these concerns. Sen. Johnson has sent over 60 oversight letters to the U.S. Department of Health and Human Services (HHS), seeking clarification on their protocols for assessing vaccine adverse effects and scrutinizing "hot" vaccine lots, but has received minimal response.

Central to the problem is the pervasive influence of global elites, represented by entities like the World Health Organization (WHO), the World Economic Forum (WEF), and their benefactor, the Bill and
