For the first time in American history, a president has been indicted. Democrat and Republican lawmakers respond to the coming criminal charges of President Donald Trump, who is expected to be arraigned in New York tomorrow. We also look at the public's response, as well as that of Trump himself. Other stories include the early release of the "Q'Anon" shaman and a parking garage attendant who is being charged with attempted murder after shooting an alleged criminal who shot him first.

Also, New York City attorney Bob Unger discusses the corrupt state of American legal institutions and his take on the Trump indictment.

And FreedomProject Director Duke Pesta talks about the incoming attack on homeschooling.
