The Democratic Party launches its long-awaited convention in Chicago today, in which the Kamala Harris/Tim Walz ticket will be confirmed without a single vote from Democratic primary voters. Will this year's carefully choreographed party unity charade fool the electorate? Or will anti-Israel protestors, said to be massing in Chicago by the thousands, conjure images of the disastrous 1968 Democratic Chicago convention? And how will breaking news of Biden's many impeachable offenses, released by the House this morning, affect this week's political optics?

Also in this episode: Kamala Harris is finally talking to the media and giving specifics on her plans for the economy. But what does this radical Left former California senator have in store for a nation already weary of four years of Bidenomics?
