Special Counsel Jack Smith has refiled criminal charges against Donald Trump. This time he's excluded the charges that got his case thrown out in the first place. Our legal scholar breaks down the new case discusses whether this will affect Trump's campaign.

Also in this episode:

The Harris-Walz campaign is spearheading a lawsuit against the Georgia Board of Elections because earlier this month the board passed election integrity measures that may actually prevent fraud.

Given the degree of lawless activity committed by various elements within our government, when is armed resistance justified? We explore this serious question.
