Donald Trump announced he will not debate Kamala Harris again, arguing that victors don't go back to fight the vanquished. But there is no consensus that Trump won, and with less than two months until the most important election in our lifetime, is this a smart move? TNA's editorial staff discuss the pros and cons of Trump not debating Harris again, whether Trump truly lost as many assert, and feature some pundits who changed their initial assessment and now believe Trump won.

Also in this episode;

Another funding battle is taking shape on Capitol Hill, and drama is already brewing, this time around the SAVE Act, an measure written to keep illegals from voting in elections;

While America seems to be divided on just about everything, they do appear united on the need to save and preserve democracy. But we argue that democracy leads to tyranny and we have little to gain by saving it.
