Congress can't agree on a government spending bill. Lawmakers have rejected two spending bills in three days (perhaps three by the time you read this), one monstrosity backed by Democrats, another smaller yet unsatisfactory proposal backed by Donald Trump. A government shutdown looms. What will that look like?

Also in this episode:

California Gov. Gavin Newsom has declared a state of emergency over bird flu concerns, a move critics say will give government authorities permission to barge onto small farms and demand culling of animals;

A Pentagon official has come out and said there are twice as many troops in Syria than previously reported;

Vladimir Putin is officially ready for talks with Donald Trump. What does this mean?
