Veteran Activist: Get the UN Out of Climate Process

The United Nations could and probably should be moved out of the climate change movement, described senior climate activist icon Philip McMaster, also known as SustainaClaus, at the UN's COP29 summit in Azerbaijan. From oilmen to politicians, SustainaClaus believes that the climate change movement might be better off when individuals meet together, decentralized from tyrannical oversight, and exchange ideas in freedom. In light of Donald Trump's mandate victory, McMaster, a vocal critic of Trump, voiced an optimistic take for the climate change movement's future. Pointing to climate disciples Robert F. Kennedy Jr. and Tulsi Gabbard, SustainaClaus is crossing his fingers that the duo might influence Trump's stance on the environment.
